Dark Horses Out Of Conservative Leadership Race

Fight on Proxies

By Times Staff Representative
KAMLOOPS—Everything in this provincial Conservative convention centres around the leadership issue.

As the convention went into its second day the campaigning to win delegates was intensified by both Herbert Anson and R. L. Maitland K.C.

The fight has been keenest in the credentials committee, which was bogged down all Friday as a result of representations that Centre Vancouver delegates had not been named at a regularly called meeting. There is also an issue over proxies carried by Vancouver delegates from distant ridings.

The Centre Vancouver delegation here is strongly pro-Anson and their status is challenged by the Maitland men. Part of the Burrard delegation has also gone over to Anson. A ruling by the credentials committee will clear the way for nomination and voting, which, however, will not be reached until this evening as resolutions and election of B.C. Conservative association officers will come first.

In a drive to gain outside delegates to make up for his loss through the split in the Vancouver delegation Mr. Maitland took the Elks Club, where he staged a midnight open house party with singing, pro-Maitland talk and hospitality. Mr. Anson, on the other hand, has not got the unanimous support of Victoria delegates.

J. G. Diefenbaker, leftist Conservative leader of Saskatchewan and Eric Willis, Manitoba Conservative leader, arrived during the night to address the convention today.

Also arrived from the east to join the Victoria delegation is Brigadier Sutherland Brown.

All hope of a political miracle like the emergency of Hon. S. F. Tolmie at the 1926 convention has been abandoned. All dark horses have decided to stay out of the fight. Unless some last minute change occurs only the names of Mr. Anson and Mr. Maitland will go to the delegates.

TAX REVISION TORY PROPOSAL

Convention at Kamloops Pledges Party to Overhaul of B.C. Structure

KAMLOOPS (CP)—The Conservative Party of British Columbia today pledged itself to a "complete revision of our taxation structure."

Major T. A. Love of Grand Forks, moving the resolution, said such revision would stimulate farm and home ownership and revive building activity.

The party also pledged itself to restore provincial government grants until the municipal structure was changed.

Preamble to the resolution said "land can no longer carry the present excessive burden taxes" and that immediate relief must be given to municipalities from the increasing burden of educational and social service costs.

THE WEATHER

VICTORIA, 5 a.m. today—Pressure is relatively high southwest of Vancouver Island. The weather has become unsettled over British Columbia with showers on the coast and also in the interior. It is fair with moderate temperature in the prairie provinces.

12,000 Families Fed

Relief Agencies Join in Housing Flood-stricken People in Northeastern U.S.

NEW YORK (AP)—Abating floods today gave the North Atlantic states time to bury their hurricane dead—nearly 500 in number—and begin the sorry task of rehabilitating areas stricken by the worst storm disaster to befall the nation in a decade.

Authorities in the seven afflicted states and at Washington, D.C., mobilized every available resource of man and money.

Most pressing of the problems in mopping up after Wednesday's hurricane—a scimitar of wind and tide that cost half a billion dollars in property damage—was the housing and feeding of 12,000 distressed families in New York, New Jersey and New England.

HEALTH MEASURES

Prompt emergency health measures by the Red Cross and other relief agencies apparently had ended the menace of the storm's grimmest aftermath—epidemic disease.

Over the flood-besieged seven state sector, an army of 100,000 relief workers and thousands of army and national guard troops and survivor volunteers—thoughtless of their own grief—poked through debris for the dead. Scores still were missing.

Red Cross officials expressed belief that many bodies, buried beneath tons of shifting sand, would never be found. The battering power of 30-foot tidal waves cut new inlets in many places along the coast, and ocean water flowed over wreckage thought to hold further dead.

Forecasts of generally fair weather accompanied the subsiding of flooded rivers in New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont.

CREST PASSES

Danger also lessened at Hartford, Conn., as the roaring Connecticut River apparently passed its crest. A tenth of the city was still under water, however, and 1,500 men labored to bolster a two-mile sandbag barricade protecting a thickly populated tenement district.

The 76-year-old railway builder, who came to Canada in 1882 as a Scottish immigrant with but 10 shillings in his pocket, had been confined to his home for several months with a heart condition.

For the last week his condition was considered critical.

Major Gen. Stewart was one of the builders of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to Prince Rupert, of parts of the Canadian Northern, of the double-tracking of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Fort William to Winnipeg, and of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway.

ABERHART ACT IS RULED OUT

Alberta Court Declares New Production Tax Ultra Vires of Legislature

EDMONTON (CP)—The appellate division of the Supreme Court of Alberta in a unanimous judgment today declared the Alberta production tax ultra vires of the Alberta Legislature on the grounds it imposed indirect taxation, which comes within federal authority only.

Passed at the 1938 session of the Legislature, the act was referred to the appellate division for a test of its validity as provided in the act itself. Entitled "The Agricultural Land Relief Act," it was argued before the appeal judges in Calgary last June.

NEW TRADE TREATY DETAILS STUDIED

Experts Advise Ministers at Ottawa on Proposed Pact With U.S.

OTTAWA (CP)—Discussions continued in Ottawa today between Canadian trade experts and members of the cabinet concerning details of the proposed new trade treaty between this country and the United States.

Hector Mackinnon, commissioner of tariffs; L. D. Wilgress, chief of the commercial intelligence service, Department of Trade and Commerce, and Norman Robertson of the External Affairs Department, who for months have been in Washington working on the treaty, this week met groups of cabinet members every day.

FORMER TORONTO MAYOR KILLED

James Simpson and Companion Die When Auto and Street Car Crash

TORONTO (CP)—James Simpson, former mayor of Toronto, and a companion both were killed today in an automobile accident in downtown Toronto.

Simpson, long prominent in Canadian labor, and a companion, identified as R. T. Barton of Winnipeg, Wis., were hurled from a small coupe when it collided with a southbound street car at Bay and Harbor streets. The car was wrecked.

First aid was administered by a passing nurse and the two men were rushed to St. Michael's Hospital. Both were unconscious.

The automobile was wedged under the heavy street car and an emergency crew had to be called to raise the trolley car and free the automobile, almost wrapped around the front of the tram.

Motorman Paul, operator of the tram, said the collision happened "so fast that I didn't see the auto until we came together."

Argentina Claims Falkland Islands

BUENOS AIRES (AP)—President Roberto Ortiz in a message to Congress yesterday said Argentina "always has and always will invoke the right of sovereignty" to the Falkland Islands off the southeastern tip of South America.

Argentina has protested British possession of the islands for a century.

BLACKED OUT—The beautiful picture above, composed of lights and shadows from floodlights shining on the Presidential Palace in Prague at a celebration not long ago, was not seen by people of Czechoslovakia's capital last night.

Army orders blacked it out completely as the mobilization of the country went ahead. It was a test of anti-air raid measures.

Seeks Action On Goldstream

B.C. Electric Asks City for Statement of Policy on Hydro Plant

The British Columbia Electric Railway Company Limited, in a letter received at the City Hall today, pressed the city for a definite statement of policy regarding renewal of the agreement on the Goldstream hydro plant.

Since the agreement of June 30, 1915, expired earlier this year, it has been renewed on a month to month basis.

The company letter, above the signature of A. T. Goward, vice-president, stated in part:

"As I have already pointed out our company is willing to sign up for a renewal of this agreement for a term of years.

"The renewal on a month to month basis has been agreed to as a convenience to the council pending their coming to a decision as to their policy on this matter, but obviously this is not by any means a satisfactory arrangement, as it does not permit the company to plan ahead for its future requirements," the letter stated.

Mayor Andrew McGavin said no decision on the Goldstream plant would be reached until it had been fully discussed by the utilities committee. Such discussion would probably await a recommendation from R. W. Beck, utilities expert.

British Fleet at Sea

Forty Warships, Making Line Eight Miles Long, Suddenly Leave Invergordon, Scotland, For Undisclosed Area In Northern Waters

LONDON (AP)—Great Britain sent her largest fleet in 15 years into northern waters today.

Some 40 ships of the Home Fleet put to sea suddenly from Invergordon.

During the night and today two flotillas of destroyers joined the Home Fleet, which stretched for more than eight miles as it sailed away.

The fleet which joined so suddenly in the precautionary preparations, officers said, had arranged to attend the highland games at Invergordon today. The massed bands of the fleet were ready to play when orders suddenly cancelled the program and the men were recalled to their stations.

Some sources reported the fleet was bound for Scapa Flow, famous Great War base.

French Add Border Units

With 380,000 Reservists Going to Posts, Republic Has More Than 2,000,000 Men Under Arms

PARIS (AP)—France today mobilized the vital covering troops that protect the country during general mobilization.

Evacuation of towns along the German frontier began.

Two full classes of reservists, numbering 380,000 men, were called to the colors in the partial mobilization, pushing the total of France's men under arms well over the 2,000,000 mark.

At the German frontier, authorities first ordered evacuation of the 1,200 citizens of Bouzonville, five miles from the Saarland German frontier.

The town was being turned over to the army as a base for one extension of the Maginot Line.

Early in the afternoon big crowds of curious persons and relatives of departing soldiers massed around army headquarters in the Hotel des Invalides and the East Railway Station, where reservists were taking trains for the border.

Uniformed reserve officers appeared in large numbers in Paris streets.

Today's partial mobilization order applied to classes which were released from training last October and October 1936. They can be recalled automatically by the army high command without the formality of ministerial decree.

Premier Reports Hitler's Demands

Chamberlain Tells British Cabinet of Talks At Godesberg

By J. C. STARK

LONDON—Prime Minister Chamberlain told his ministers today of the frail foundation of Europe's peace after his fateful visits with Reichsfuehrer Hitler while Britain joined a Europe-wide rush to get ready for possible war.

The Prime Minister apparently had only a virtual ultimatum from Hitler for Czechoslovakia expiring October 1—a week from today—to show for his midnight parley on the banks of the Rhine.

For anxious Britain, the Prime Minister had only these words: "My first duty now that I have come back is to report to the British and French governments the result of my mission. . . I will only say this. . . I trust that all concerned will continue their efforts to solve the Czechoslovak problem peacefully because on that turns the peace of Europe in our time."

TELLS CABINET

Back at No. 10 Downing Street, Mr. Chamberlain went into a quick session with his "inner cabinet" of advisers before he told the full cabinet of the demands he passed on to Czechoslovakia from Hitler.

As the Prime Minister entered No. 10 Downing Street his wife kissed him.

The French Premier, Edouard Daladier, was expected here today to meet with Mr. Chamberlain, as they met last Sunday to discuss the first peace plan Mr. Chamberlain brought from Hitler for the cession of Czechoslovak Sudetenland to Germany.

Belgium Calls Out Reserves

BRUSSELS (AP)—The Belgian government today called to the colors an unspecified number of specialized reserves and one reserve artillery regiment.

Regular soldiers and officers on leave were recalled, it was learned, and frontier units were reinforced.

These steps became known after the cabinet in a two-hour meeting had reviewed the country's security measures and surveyed the international situation.

CZECH BORDER AT HUNGARY CLOSED

British and U.S. Legations Prepare to Evacuate Their Citizens If Necessary

BUDAPEST (AP)—The British and U.S. legations in Budapest have trains ready to evacuate their nationals in case of emergency.

The Hungarian-Czechoslovak border was closed. Czechoslovakia and Hungary rushed military preparations in the frontier area.

It became certain at noon that there was no communication with Czechoslovakia. The frontier, even on the Hungarian side, was hermetically sealed. Farmers living near the frontier were barred from working in their fields.

Hungarians were told that no letters or telegrams could be sent to Czechoslovakia for the moment. Highway and telephone communication was discontinued earlier today.

MILES OF WIRE

The Czechoslovak army moved strong reinforcements into position at the border. Reports reaching Budapest said that at sunrise the entire frontier appeared to be a solid wall of barbed wire, steel and concrete.

Ottawa Ministers Asked to Stand By

OTTAWA (CP)—Hon. Norman Rogers, Minister of Labor, today canceled his trip to Val d'Or, Que., where he had planned to speak at the opening ceremonies of the new mining school.

The minister was to have left by plane, but at the last moment decided to remain in the capital. No explanation was given for his change, but it is understood to have been because of the critical international situation.

While no cabinet meeting had been called up to noon today, it was learned Prime Minister King had asked his ministers to be available should developments in Europe require an emergency meeting at the week-end.

King Talks With Lord Halifax

LONDON (CP)—In an unusual early morning audience today the King received Lord Halifax, who looked grave and preoccupied as he walked almost unnoticed through a crowd gathered to watch the changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace.

Chamberlain Sends Hitler's Terms to Prague Ministry

PEACE IN BALANCE

By J. F. SANDERSON

Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON—Peace or war in Europe now hangs in the balance while the Czech government considers Chancellor Hitler's latest proposals, handed to Prime Minister Chamberlain at Godesberg late last night.

The British Prime Minister arrived back in London this morning, looked grave and tired, a short time before the cabinet assembled to review Hitler's latest price to maintain peace.

There was nothing official here on the terms of Hitler's latest proposals, which have been handed on to the Czech government by Great Britain without advice as to whether they should be accepted or rejected.

It was understood, however, that Hitler insists on seizing the predominantly German sections of Sudetenland with his army. While the immediate reaction was gloomy, it also was considered that the Fuehrer's terms might be used for further negotiations and that all is not lost yet.

If the Germans and the Czechs could be persuaded to call off their massed troops, Hitler's demands might be used as the basis for further negotiations. If the Czechs agreed to let him occupy the predominantly German areas he might be willing to negotiate the other points without resorting to war.

Acceptance of all terms within six days (by October 1) with war as the only alternative was reported to be Hitler's stand.

TERMS REPORTED

LONDON (AP)—Reichsfuehrer Hitler's terms for peaceful settlement of the central European crisis were stated in official Czechoslovak circles today to call for revision of Czechoslovakia's frontier without any German guarantee of the new borders unless Hungary and Poland also became guarantors.

This was interpreted by observers as strongly implying Hitler's support for the demands of Poland and Hungary for return of their minorities in Czechoslovakia.

Czechoslovaks said Hitler's definite terms were:

1. German occupation before October 1 of all Sudeten areas where more than 75 per cent of the population is German.

2. Evacuation of all Czechoslovak soldiers and civil servants from these areas by the same date.

3. A plebiscite in remaining Sudeten districts in which the inhabitants would vote on whether they wanted to go with Germany or remain in Czechoslovakia.

(The Canadian Press in London heard that Czech demobilization was also demanded by Hitler.)

Hitler was said to have refused to join in any guarantee of the new Czechoslovak frontier unless Hungary and Poland also joined, thus in effect supporting their claims for recovery of their own minority areas.

The German memorandum conveying Hitler's terms was given "without comment" to Jan Masaryk, Czechoslovak minister, by the British Foreign Office.

Czechoslovak quarters said the memorandum was being coded for Prague. They remarked bitterly that Czechoslovakia's strongest fortifications were located in areas Hitler demands.

DOUBT VOICED

Because Hitler's demands went beyond the British-French plan which the Prague government had accepted, Czechoslovaks here considered it doubtful the new Czechoslovak regime headed by a military chief would submit.

The statement in Czechoslovak quarters that the British had conveyed the note to Masaryk "without comment" was interpreted by them as meaning Britain, at least for the moment, was not bringing pressure on Prague to accept.

Numerous Meetings In Great Britain

LONDON (CP)—Labor organizations have arranged to hold nearly 3,000 week-end meetings in Britain to demonstrate against "the shameful sacrifice of the Czechoslovakia people to Hitler's threat of war."

Czechs Have Six Days to Answer

Mussolini Says Totalitarian States Must Be Prepared to Fight

PADUA, Italy (AP)—Premier Mussolini revealed today Germany had served a six-day ultimatum on Czechoslovakia, expiring October 1.

If Duce in a speech here did not detail the terms of the German demand, presumably they were for the outright surrender of Sudeten territory.

Mussolini cautioned his Fascist followers to be ready for war.

It would be a "very grave error," he said, if the "patient attitude of Germany should be interpreted falsely," indicating Hitler could not be expected to take flight.

Mussolini declared Berlin had manifested "supreme moderation."

SIX DAYS TO ANSWER

"Germany has sent requests to Prague and has given until October 1 for a reply," he said. "There are, therefore, exactly six days for the Prague government to resume a way of sanity, for it would be truly absurd and even criminal that Europe's millions should be hurled against one another, simply to maintain the feudal lordship of Benes (President of Czechoslovakia)."

"We know the democratic regimes fear responsibility because each is trying to unload it on the opposition party or on his neighbor."

"In the so-called totalitarian regime this shifting of responsibility is impossible. The problem now placed before the consciences of the peoples must be settled in integral and definite manner."

MAY LOCALIZE CONFLICT

"There is time for this solution," Mussolini continued, "and if the conflict must nevertheless break out there is a possibility of localizing it."

"But it happens in these days that more or less influential parties and tendencies in western countries contend this is the opportune moment to take a stand and settle accounts with the totalitarian states."

"In this case these parties and tendencies will find themselves confronted by two countries, but two countries which will form a single bloc."

"And if in Italy there should be some of those whom I call men who stand perennially behind shutters—those whom I call morally bourgeois—I declare they immediately will be placed hors de combat."

"I know all of you are ready for any eventuality," he shouted. When his legions roared back their approval, Mussolini concluded: "This reply of yours, this oceanic cry, has been heard at this moment by the world."

THREE CZECH BORDERS CLOSED

WARSAW (AP)—The Polish-Czechoslovak border was closed today and the U.S. consulate here reported there was no chance for Americans attempting to leave Czechoslovakia to do so by way of Poland.

(The German and Hungarian-Czechoslovak borders were also closed, leaving the Roumanian-Czechoslovak border the only open frontier.)

Germans Call Note Conciliatory

Berlin Source Says Hitler Seeking Peaceful Solution With Czechs

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER
Associated Press Correspondent

BERLIN—A man who saw a copy of Chancellor Hitler's memorandum to Prime Minister Chamberlain said today it was most conciliatory in tone and gave a basis for peaceful solution.

This informant said Herr Hitler in no way included Polish and Hungarian demands on Czechoslovakia in the memorandum, given to Mr. Chamberlain at Godesberg early this morning as Germany's final stand on the Czechoslovak question.

In fact, the informant stated, these demands were not discussed by Chamberlain and Hitler at the meeting.

It was learned, however, that the Fuehrer declined to become a co-guarantor of the new frontiers of Czechoslovakia unless other minorities than the German also attained their wishes.

Later a foreign office spokesman described Hitler's position thus:

"No possibility exists for Germany to guarantee the new Czech border so long as an obligation to the Reich may be involved to protect this border even if it is rendered questionable on account of demands for the self-determination of other nationalities."

Eight days, the informant said, are envisaged for peaceful handing over of the Sudeten territory to Germany.

The eight days, he said, were counted from the evening of September 23, when the memorandum was handed to Mr. Chamberlain, making the expiration date October 1.

The informant said he was pledged to oath not to give this correspondent direct quotations from the text of the memorandum.

Hitler's demands, he said, were even less than those made at the meeting of Hitler and the Prime Minister at Berchtesgaden September 15.

Meanwhile, a semi-official press release observed that Hitler, in the memorandum, once more put Germany's demands in the most precise terms possible and in such a manner that it was apparent Germany did everything possible to bring about a peaceful solution.

Hitler's memorandum, the press release continued, contained suggestions for carrying out what already has been conceded to Germany by Great Britain and France and what was accepted by the Czechoslovak government of Milan Hodza before its resignation.

Hitler's memorandum, however, was said to be positively Germany's last offer to Czechoslovakia.

If the Czechoslovaks now decline, the press release said, they would carry the responsibility for all that might follow. If the Czechs agree, peace would be preserved, it stated.

Indian Princes Support Britain

SIMLA, India (CP-Havas)—Eight ruling Indian princes today offered to put all their resources at the service of Great Britain in the event of conflict, bringing to 22 the total of Indian potentates who have pledged fealty to King George if the United Kingdom goes to war.

The Maharajahs of Travancore, Udaipur and Rewa—three states with respective populations of 5,090,462, 1,560,000 and 1,587,000—were among the eight who promised loyalty today in telegrams to the Marquess of Linlithgow, Viceroy of India.

BRITISH VETERANS HONOR FALLEN COMRADES—Members of the Old Contemptibles Association held a national parade and memorial service on the Horse Guards Parade in Whitehall, London, and then made their annual pilgrimage to the Cenotaph. The picture gives a general view of the march past the Empire shrine.

British Families Home From Prague

LONDON (AP)—The first group of British "refugees" from Czechoslovakia were home today. The party of 19, including the families of British legation officials, arrived at Croydon aboard the Imperial Airways liner Hercules, urgently summoned to Prague Thursday.

"There was no scare in Prague when we left," declared R. J. Stopford, member of Viscount Runciman's dissolved mediation mission, who returned on the plane.

"The British people who came back returned purely as a precautionary measure. Some are still there. The consulate has made arrangements for them to leave if necessary."

Czechs Ready Now for Defence

Republic Has 1,500,000 Men Under Arms to Resist Invasion

By ROY PORTER
Associated Press Foreign Staff

PRAGUE — Czechoslovakia mobilized itself and an army estimated at 1,500,000 today against the danger of German invasion.

Fears, excitement and war preparations gripped the 20-year-old republic as she made ready for defence "with every means at her disposal."

Six hours were given to bring the normal standing army of 180,000 to nearly ten times that figure.

First line reserves and some second line reserves rushed to the colors. Military trucks rumbled, seemingly endlessly, through the crooked streets of this ancient capital.

All trains were reserved for the assembling soldiers. Excited enthusiasm burst forth as the nation sprang to arms on an announcement of the mobilization order. President Eduard Benes last night ordered the preparations after Jan Syrový, Premier, army inspector general and national hero, had told his ministers, "the time has come for this republic to defend herself."

Hitler's memorandum, the press release continued, contained suggestions for carrying out what already has been conceded to Germany by Great Britain and France and what was accepted by the Czechoslovak government of Milan Hodza before its resignation.

Hitler's memorandum, however, was said to be positively Germany's last offer to Czechoslovakia.

British Calm in Europe's Test

People Hope Chamberlain Will Succeed on Mission of Peace

By EDWIN JOHNSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON—Even as ominous rumblings of war drew closer and louder in the homes of Britain's millions, the spirit of the average man on the street, which has undergone the severest strain in recent days, remained comparatively buoyant and hopeful today.

Workers streaming by bus and underground to offices and factories buried themselves in their papers which in bold type related the dramatic end of the Chamberlain-Hitler talks at Godesberg. They learned of the significant mobilization orders and increased troop concentration on the Czech frontiers, and the emergency measures in their own country.

Amid this gloom and suspense, however, the average citizen clung desperately to the hope Prime Minister Chamberlain could yet succeed in his mission of peace. They were heartened by the Prime Minister's statement at the conclusion of last night's final meeting with Chancellor Hitler: "You cannot call this a complete breakdown," and again, as he left London: "We must still make great efforts to save the peace of Europe."

There is a considerable element of the populace inclined to view war with Germany as inevitable some day and take the attitude that Hitler's intransigence at Godesberg has shown conclusively he is not concerned with Britain's friendship. They declare that if Hitler's ambitions for world hegemony have to be throttled, it is just as well to have a showdown now while Great Britain and France are able to meet the challenge.

But the average man on the street shrinks from the horrors of possible war and feels that while even the slimmest chance of ensuring peace with honor and justice remains, no efforts should be spared in that direction.

Many were inclined to take a fatalistic view of the situation. "If war comes there is nothing we can do about it," they said, while a jobless man marching in a business street caused considerable amusement with the following placard: "War will solve the unemployment question; join ARP" (Air Raids Precautions Organization).

Orderly parades have also been staged at several points in the metropolitan area in protest against the inadequacy of bomb shelters. Women in Islington last night marched through the streets carrying posters demanding immediate government action.

During his long lifetime, Major-General Stewart rose from poverty to wealth and was closely linked with the opening of undeveloped areas in the Dominion through his railway building. After he came from his native Sutherlandshire, Scotland, to Canada as a youth in 1882, he worked as a farm hand and then as an axeman when Vancouver was being laid out in 1885.

Later he got a job as an engineer with a construction firm building railways in Montana in the nineties and finally became a partner with the firm. He was president of the Northern Construction Company and J. W. Stewart Limited at the time of his death. For many years he was a member of the firm of Foley, Welch and Stewart.

He married, in 1901, Elizabeth Moran, a native of Limerick, Ireland. She died in 1935. Surviving him are his daughter, Mrs. A. T. McLean, and a brother, Major Angus Stewart, both of Vancouver; and two sisters, Mrs. Kenneth Munro, Drummond, Scotland, and Mrs. Jessie Morrison, Edinburgh.

During his long lifetime, Major-General Stewart rose from poverty to wealth and was closely linked with the opening of undeveloped areas in the Dominion through his railway building. After he came from his native Sutherlandshire, Scotland, to Canada as a youth in 1882, he worked as a farm hand and then as an axeman when Vancouver was being laid out in 1885.

Later he got a job as an engineer with a construction firm building railways in Montana in the nineties and finally became a partner with the firm. Court Will Decide Capital Or Income

VANCOUVER (CP)—An application has been made in the B.C. Supreme Court here for a judgment deciding whether a three-fourths share of $15,000 paid for an oil and gas lease should be regarded as capital or income in the $82,000 estate of Robert Barker, who died last Christmas Day.

If income the money would go to three nieces, Ann Newland Forrest, Nanaimo, and Margaret Frances and Norah Jane Forrest, Courtenay. If capital it would become part of the residuary estate.

Major-General John William Stewart, who died in Vancouver today, was once described by the late T. P. O'Connor, the Irish writer and parliamentarian, as "one of the men who really helped to win the Great War."

Yet he was not a soldier by profession. His service was as a railway builder, first with the Canadian Expeditionary Force and later in reorganization of rail transport behind the entire British Western Front and in Palestine.

For this came his military rank and other honors, C.B. (1919), C.M.G. (1917), D.S.O., and he was mentioned in dispatches four times. Field Marshal Earl Haig was a personal friend of his.

At the outbreak of the 1914 conflict he assisted financially in raising the 72nd Battalion, Seaforth Highlanders of Canada, and was honorary colonel of the unit at the time of his death.

Macphail's Death Widely Mourned

MONTREAL (CP)—Arrangements were being made here today for the funeral of the late Sir Andrew Macphail.

Death claimed the well-known figure yesterday in his 74th year. Sir Andrew enriched the life of Canada at many points with his writings and professional skill as a leading pathologist.

Although he was professor of the history of medicine at McGill University for many years, Sir Andrew was known to a larger public through his writings on a wide range of subjects.

He began his literary career as a contributor to the McGill University magazine, of which he later became editor. He was also editor of the Canadian Medical Association journal over a long period.

WAR SERVICE
He held the rank of major in the Sixth Field Ambulance with which he saw service in France from 1914 to 1919, and was created a knight bachelor for his war work. Another war reward was the Order of the British Empire.

Sir Andrew was well known in Great Britain for his essays and literary criticism, while his official history of Canada's medical services during the Great War, in the organization of which he played a considerable part, has become a standard work on the subject. He was awarded the Quebec government literature prize for this work in 1928.

The variety of Sir Andrew's productions can be seen from a list of the titles of his works: "Maria Chappelaine" (translation of Louis Hemon's novel of Quebec life); "The Life of John MacCac" (a sympathetic biography of a friend and fellow writer and doctor, the author of the war poem, "In Flanders Fields"); and "Essays in Politics," "Three Persons" and "Books of Sorrow," critical pamphlets.

Born at Onwell, P.E.I. in 1864, he married Georgina Eurland of Montreal in 1893. She died in 1902. His children—a son, Jeffrey, and a daughter, Mrs. Lionel M. Lindsay, both of Montreal—were with him when he died.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a.m. tomorrow at the funeral home of J. J. McPherson, 1111 St. James Street. Burial will be in Mount Royal cemetery.

MINK BREEDERS HERE ORGANIZE

Mink farmers of the lower island met on Thursday at the home of G. H. Pethick, Elk Lake, and decided to organize as the Lower Island Mink Breeders' Association.

A. Harvey, F. P. Fatt and G. H. Pethick were appointed a committee to draw up a constitution.

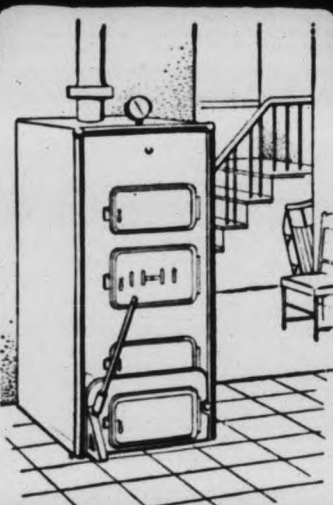

The election of officers of the association will be held towards the end of next month.

Officials of the British Columbia Mink Breeders' Association gave valuable hints to the local breeders on methods of mink farming carried out in the larger farms of the province.

A caravan inspection of the mink farms in and around Victoria followed the meeting.

Florida has about 90 electrical storms every year.

THIS

Warm, sun-like, radiant heat, flowing from smart, new styled radiators, halts window drafts—stays close to the floors. Radiant heat is the basis of personal comfort in the modern home.

Install a modern heating system in your home; if you are considering air-conditioning as well, remember that better air-conditioning begins with radiant heat—the heat from scientifically-designed and properly-located radiators.

Full details regarding modern heating installations may be obtained from your heating contractor or nearest distributor's showroom. Use the facilities of the Home Improvement Plan—see your local bank manager.

AS CHILEAN TROOPS MOPPED UP AFTER NAZI OUTBREAK—Extraordinary powers approximating a dictatorship are being exercised by President Arturo of Chile as a result of the recent unsuccessful Nazi "putsch" in Santiago. Some of the captured rebels, most of them university students, with arms upraised, were being escorted by government soldiers along Santiago's Calle Morande when the above picture was taken.

Morgan Appeals For Harmony

B.C. Conservative President Says Party Needs Publicity Channels

KAMLOOPS (CP)—President J. H. Morgan of the British Columbia Conservative Association urges the party to show "unity, broad tolerance and complete harmony within our ranks," to show an unbroken front and give loyal support to the new provincial leader.

In his annual report to the party convention here yesterday, Mr. Morgan asked "an immediate campaign of organization in preparation for the next federal general election, 'likely' to be held after the next session of Parliament.

One thing the Conservative party needed in British Columbia was greater facilities for publicity, he said.

"The retributive power of government in this province is such as to make it dangerous to criticize the administration," he said. "Hence it is not to be expected that many newspapers will risk incurring the active displeasure of a government that has already, through its premier, hinted at curtailment of the freedom of the press."

"In furtherance of this statement, may I point out that never in the history of this province has there been evidenced such determination on the part of the government to prevent untrammelled expression of public opinion, and curb democratic rights and liberties."

"There has been no medium available for exposing in print the actual incidents and tendencies of the worst and most vicious government that this country has ever seen."

CONFIDENCE IN MANION

The convention adopted unanimously a motion of confidence in the new National Conservative leader—Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion—which was introduced by Hon. Grote Stirling, M.P. for Yale and former minister of national defence.

On the ground the Liberal party had failed to strengthen unity within the Dominion, the meeting also adopted a resolution moved by William Haldane, Victoria, that the Conservative party bend every effort to advance the principles of Confederation and unity in the Dominion.

Local Delegates At Convention

KAMLOOPS—Victoria and Vancouver Island delegates who have registered at the Provincial Conservative convention here are:

Victoria: Senator Barnard, J. L. Mara, Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Harvey, R. A. Wootton, Mr. and Mrs. H. Ansecomb, Dr. and Mrs. J. D. Hunter, B. A. McKelvie, F. A. Willis, Mrs. M. L. Sinclair, Mr. J. Roberts, W. H. M. Haldane, William Duck, Mrs. I. J. MacKenzie, F. W. Ziegler, J. Taylor, E. E. Bragg, Mrs. J. Taylor, Miss R. Parr, W. Rawson, H. H. Hisscock, J. J. Bothwell, Mrs. E. N. Willis, Mrs. M. W. Adam, Miss M. A. White, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Cameron, George F. Salmon, Major F. Longstaff, W. A. Jones, Saanich: Percy Mickleburgh, Mrs. F. S. Osborne, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Osborne, Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Wallace, and W. H. Carr. Esquimalt: R. H. Pooley, E. V. Finland, Mrs. Bowden, H. G. Allen, and George Duncan. Cowichan-Newcastle: Capt. R. B. Longridge, C. Wallich, J. B. Aitken, and Dr. W. B. Clayton. Islands: Capt. McG. Macintosh, M.P.P., G. A. Crofton of Ganges, and Mr. Ricketts.

Oldest Tory Is Honored

KAMLOOPS—M. Tebo, 84, of Port Alberni, was honored by the provincial Conservative convention as being the oldest Conservative in the province. He has been attending Conservative gatherings ever since there was a Conservative organization in British Columbia, and had never even been tempted to vote anything but the straight Tory ticket. He was held up as an example of what an ideal Conservative should be.

When Chairman Morgan, after lauding Mr. Tebo's record, called him to the platform to be honored last night, he was not in the hall. It was found he had gone to bed early in a nearby hotel.

Road Proposal Raises Argument

Conservatives Vote for "Independent" Highway Commission

By Times Staff Representative
 KAMLOOPS—After the first argument of the convention, the provincial Conservative gathering here passed a resolution presented by Gen. J. A. Clark pledging the party, upon election to office, to the creation of "an independent highway commission responsible only to the Legislature, to be entrusted with the planning, management, maintenance and extension of our highways."

The resolution was accepted only after a fight over inclusion of the word "independent."

"I suggest to you that use of the word 'independent' is hypocritical and dishonest," said Allan MacDonnell of Burrard. "I don't think any government would live up to it—not even a Conservative government. If we are going to turn over planning, building and maintenance of our roads to an independent highway commission, we are simply setting up another body to which the buck may be passed. It is a negative to responsible government to set up such a body. We have too many such bodies now."

Mr. MacDonnell asked whether in any case a government did not have to take the responsibility.

BIGGEST BRANCH

"By this resolution we propose to abdicate our responsibility in the biggest branch of the public works of the province. We would be saying to the people we have not enough confidence in our leader and minister of public works. If we do this why should we not go out and employ three bank men and put them in charge of the finances of this province? A Cowichan delegate said an "independent commission would do as they please, but we have got to find the money for these roads."

Amendments to the resolution were proposed and argued, but the convention finally consented to drop them when Gen. Clark inserted the words "responsible only to the Legislature," which had not been in the original draft.

The convention also voted in favor of the "creation of a purchasing department under a purchasing agent free from political control" and the adoption of the method of open, advertised public tenders for all public works and for all concessions for the development of natural resources.

Huston Plays In New Role

He Sings and Dances a Jig in New Broadway Stage Play

By TED FARAH
 Canadian Press Staff Writer
 NEW YORK—Walter Huston, the Canadian who ran away from home as a boy and became one of the finest actors of his time, returns to Broadway this season as a peg-legged, cantankerous old tyrant named Peter Stuyvesant in an opera of old tough New York.

Yes, Huston sings too! He even dances, with his peg-leg, a little jig that does the heart good.

Huston, a native of Toronto, is 54 years old now, but he sings and acts as if the show were a Huston holiday from the Kleig lights of Hollywood.

NEW AMSTERDAM

There was a "run through" of "Knickerbocker Holiday" at the Barrymore Theatre this week and after seeing it, one may venture an opinion that when it gets back to Manhattan October 11 after a short road tryout, the critics will give it a nice welcome.

The book and lyrics are by Maxwell Anderson, whose lines of poetry themselves sing more sweetly than those of any other American dramatist. Music is by Kurt Weill, a composer who has done some good work in writing scores for the movies.

The show has two acts and everything happens in New Amsterdam on a public holiday, the day on which Peter Stuyvesant, last Dutch governor, arrives to assume office. Arrangements have been made for old Peter to woo the pretty young daughter of the retiring governor, but she loves another, which gives readers an idea that Anderson has not done much better than he usually does with his plots. The story, however, makes oblique references to tyrants and the democratic way; it has much charming

Party Pledge on U.K. Agreements

Conservatives Resolve to Resist Any Change in Empire Trade Preferences

KAMLOOPS (CP)—The British Columbia Conservative Party today stood pledged to fight for maintenance and extension of tariff preference for British Columbia products sold on the United Kingdom market.

Adopting a resolution moved by Howard Green, M.P. for Vancouver South, and seconded by Martin Griffin Jr. of Vancouver, the convention yesterday evening expressed regret at the "utter failure of the present Liberal administration in our province to take any determined stand for the maintenance of these British preferences and pledges itself to fight both in and out of office for maintenance of these preferences" and for their extension.

The preamble to the resolution says the British Empire trade agreements negotiated by the Bennett government have been the keystone of the recovery of British Columbia from the depression.

These agreements, the resolution said, appear to be threatened by current negotiations being carried on by the present Canadian government in connection with Anglo-American and Canadian-American trade agreements.

Mr. Green said he was convinced the Dominion Government was prepared to "sell British Columbia down the river" as far as the preferences were concerned.

He understood lumber and fruit from British Columbia were able to compete on the British market only by reason of the preferential tariff. It would be impossible for the province to sell its lumber in the United States if the preferences were lost because the United States was taking "effective steps" to stop that sale.

Hon. Grote Stirling, M.P. for Yale, said that if the preferences were removed, it would mean British Columbia's export business would be "severely cut." Products now sold in the Old Country would have to be sold on the domestic market and returns to the producers would be lower.

Dr. J. D. Hunter, M.P.P. for Victoria, introduced a motion expressing sincere regret at the death last February of Dr. Frank Patterson of Vancouver, British Columbia Conservative leader, and "voicing appreciation for the splendid work he did during the short time he led the party."

ing humor, and the music and lyrics are fresh and lovely. One song in particular, "Romances Must Have Tears," seems due for lasting popularity.

Crisis Hangs Fire

ONE OF THE CHARACTERISTICS OF the average British citizen, especially in times of crisis, is the capacity to keep calm and allow his vision to extend beyond the end of his nose. As he contemplates the state of affairs today he may be saying many things to himself which he would hesitate to say out loud. His inherent instinct for fair play always influences his judgments. This does not weaken his process of calculation. It broadens his perspective, adds to the quality and comprehensiveness of his analysis, and produces a clearer picture of realities.

Upon this picture he will meditate during the week-end. He will perhaps employ many of these 36 hours away from his bench, his counter, or his office in a recapitulation of all the business which seemed to compel Prime Minister Chamberlain to go to Berchtesgaden and then to Godesberg. It will be like him to set up each day's events and alarms for seriatim examination. He will do it better in the comparative solitude of his own home than in crowded tube or bus. Quite possibly he will enroll as a background for his soliloquy a figurative catalogue of the antecedents of the dilemma confronting Europe's statesmen. He may let his mind begin with the Mukden "incident" which the historian may enter on his record as the preliminary to the reawakening of a despotism the world thought the great conflict had buried deep in the scheme of a better order. As he strolls down that short corridor of time he may pause at markings which remind him of Ethiopia, of the Spanish tragedy, of the revival of another arms race which was never to be again. He may tabulate the other changes in detail that have blurred the picture of hope he saw on a November day nearly 20 years ago.

As the slowly-moving parade passes by, however, he will take courage from the fact that—as Mr. Chamberlain said on his return from Godesberg today—efforts which have been made to save the peace cannot be called "a complete breakdown." What the next few hours, next week, or next year may bring is on the knees of the gods. But out of the tragic uncertainties of the moment should come a new resolve in which the men and women of all the world can unite. They can make common cause of peace. They can pledge themselves to a program of moral rearmament. They can issue a final warning to the schemer that no longer shall he be permitted to play battle-dore and shuttlecock with humanity.

Exiles Adrift

THESE BEING BOOM TIMES IN THE field of international oratory, a man becomes accustomed to finding the affairs of the world being explained to him almost exclusively in extravagant figures of speech. But a steady diet of language as full of symbolism as a political cartoon tends in the long run to rob the situations under discussion of much of their reality.

A recent news story describes in literal terms the situation in which a certain group of exiled Jews find themselves. They are living on a barge moored in the Danube. They journeyed down the river with very little idea of where they might find a refuge that was secure. The barge is now moored in an arm of the Danube that lies in Hungary. But Hungary has just announced that the Jews can no longer stay there. Friends in a nearby Czechoslovakian town were attempting to get the government to admit them, but they had already failed once. Hungary is preparing to cut the mooring cables and set the barge and its human burden adrift.

It would be hard to imagine any figurative language with the power to suggest the tragedy of the European Jew today more vividly than this bare report of homeless men and women trapped on a barge.

New Zealand Elections

NEXT OCTOBER 15 THE ELECTORS of New Zealand will go to the polls to endorse or defeat their first Labor Government. The head of the present administration is Rt. Hon. J. M. Savage, P.C. As well as being Prime Minister, he is Minister of External Affairs, of Cook Islands, Native Minister and Minister of Broadcasting. At the general election of November 27, 1935, the Labor Party captured 53 out of a House of Representatives membership of 80, the Nationalists—formerly the government—accounting for 20 and Independents seven.

Evidently satisfied with his prospects of re-election, Premier Savage prefers to take the temperature of the electorate now rather than allow the present Parliament to run its constitutional life of four years. During his government's period in office it has enhanced New Zealand's reputation as the originator of the most forward-looking and practical social legislation. It is largely on the record of achievement in this realm that Mr. Savage is expected to make his chief bid for endorsement. He tells the public this is what labor has done for New Zealand in its 32 months of office:

Wage rates restored to 1931 level; total wages paid increased by over $19,000,000 yearly; 40-hour week instituted wherever possible; unemployment reduced by 80 per cent; increased relief and sustenance payments; a guaranteed price for dairy farmers; a national scheme for marketing primary products; reduced farmers' mortgages by $3,300,000; a minimum wage for agricultural workers; national radio broadcasting; readmitted five-year-olds to schools; improved teachers' salaries and conditions; protected tenants against increased rents; passed Prevention of Profiteering Act; initiated five-day week; increased pensions to widows and the aged; instituted pensions for invalids; protected the workers' equity in their homes; granted political rights to civil servants; state control of currency and credit; instituted pensions for deserted wives; building 3,500 workers' dwellings yearly; increased and restored war pensions; re-established the Arbitration Court; Family Allowance Act liberalized; re-instituted graduated land tax; improved conditions in shops and offices; reorganized the National Defence; improved Workers' Compensation Act; more equitable distribution of wealth.

The gospel of the New Zealand Labor Party is that of Constitutional Democracy. It claims that it is the only political party in the Dominion that "does not impose upon the mass of its members the decisions of a minority." So, by the same token, it presumably will ask support next month on its record. It seems to have done remarkably well.

Terpsichore at the Bench

IT IS FAIRLY COMMON KNOWLEDGE that people do certain kinds of work better to music, and that music has been used in factories to promote greater efficiency. But now comes a psychologist who reports that he has been able to determine exactly what kind of musical programs will produce a specific kind of work.

Waltzes and swing produce equally high grade performances. But the program has to be all one or the other. A mixed program throws a disastrous monkey-wrench into the works. The mixed program is the one, incidentally, that the workers enjoy the most.

What reactions the news of such accomplished manipulation of the puppet that walks like a man produces in one depends on one's reactions to the average puppet, of course. There being a touch of sentimentality in the autumn air around this newspaper's office today, the thought of the art that was born as a spontaneous expression of joy being used at last to make man behave like a metronome or a windshield wiper for someone else's profit produces a glowering despondency.

Two Ambassadors Speak

THE OTHER DAY IN TWO DIFFERENT cities of the Old World two United States ambassadors, with the crucial times of the moment in their minds, delivered two helpful speeches. Naturally they were not intended to reflect any future course of action on the part of the neighboring republic. But they breathed an unmistakable protest against brutal force and the urgent necessity for the democracies to prepare to defend freedom and liberty.

Said Mr. Bullitt, American ambassador to France, in part of his Paris address: "We know that when all nations begin to use every available dollar of national income for the production of weapons of war, it is impossible to raise general standards of living or even to maintain those standards of living that exist, and that it is difficult to preserve either economic equilibrium or financial stability. We know that in the long run the doctrine of 'live and let live' works for life, and that the treatment of one human being on another human being as if he were less than human works for death. We know that the spring of wisdom is to be found in the words 'Do unto others as you would they should do unto you.'"

Said Mr. Kennedy, American ambassador to Great Britain, in a thoughtful and serious address at Aberdeen: "It appears to me we have come to a point where spiritual values have so declined in men that incentive is disappearing. More and more I talk with individuals who are discouraged, who have laid their burdens down, who are victims of a hopeless apathy. We must reawaken the flame of faith and spiritual courage which has always enheartened the men of right vision in the world's history. We must give our young men and women who are just coming of age something else to hope for than a short life carrying a gun."

How do you know the other creatures have no appreciation of beauty? Man is the only one who makes the world ugly.

Switzerland's optimism over her present race to complete defence preparations, recalls that old saying: The race belongs to the Swiss.

There is one thing to be said for bombers: The world probably would be at war today if statesmen knew all the fighting would be done far away.

BETRAYAL

Sleep not in peace, ye Flanders' dead: The cause for which your blood was shed Has been betrayed. They did not keep True faith with you who lie asleep, With each a cross to mark his bed, And poppies blowing overhead Where once his own life-blood ran red. Your rest can never be sweet and deep In Flanders' fields.

For now ye know you died for naught; Since freedom has been sold—and bought. They've broken faith with you, who died, And once again you're crucified In Flanders' fields.

Loose Ends

By BRUCE HUTCHISON

TEX KNOWS

TEX IS A WISE OLD HORSE, with a wisdom never found in man, only in pack ponies in mountain country. He knows this plateau, every foot of its trails, its sweeps of purple heather, its forests of pungent yellow cedar; knows them almost as well as his owner, Clinton Wood, who discovered them and gave them to the people of British Columbia. And as old Tex jogs along the trail, his huge pack swaying back and forth, he probably wonders who so many people are coming up here these days, keeping him and the other ponies so busy, for there are some things, like the lure of the Plateau scenery, that even pack horses cannot understand.

Follow Tex, who needs no leading, and you will never miss the trail—up through yellow cedars and tough mountain hemlocks; up past the forestry camp where Joe St. Pierre even today is carving superb caricatures of Mussolini and other notables on convenient stumps just for the fun of it in his spare time; up past the Mount Beecher cabin, where there is always wood and grub for the straggler; up over the shoulder of the great mountain, where you can see the Straits of Georgia laid out below you, flecked with islands, like a map; and then down to the myriad lakes and pools of the Forbidden Plateau.

STRANGE DREAM

FOLLOW TEX into this country which is built precisely like the storybook description of fairland and marvel at the curious dream and the enduring purpose which opened it to the world. This is the dream of Clinton Wood and his good wife and his family of lean, woodmen sons. This is the dream which has been realized and has come to life, until now even tenderfeet like me can ride or walk into fairland in three hours. Next year, with a new trail, we should be able to do it in 90 minutes.

If you had been walking through the logged-off land back of Courtenay four years ago, you would have seen an incredible sight. You would have seen Clint Wood and his boys ploughing a road with an old battered flivver instead of horses.

They had no horses, but they had a flivver, and they had their dream of opening the Plateau to the world. With their plough and a scraper, while people laughed or pitied them, they turned nine miles of old logging railway grade into an excellent road. Only mad men would have tried it. The Woods were like that; quite mad, splendidly mad, at first with a dream such as we don't often have these days, such as our fathers had when they built the Cariboo Road and the C.P.R. Mad men like the Woods built our whole country, with women like Mrs. Wood beside them, and the breed is not dead yet.

They finished their nine miles of road (and their flivver as well), and up above Courtenay they built their fine lodge of brown cedar shakes to Mrs. Wood's design, where you can see the Straits spread below, and the marching line of the mainland mountains and the smoke of Powell River and the silver gash of Comox Bay.

Then they built their trail into the Plateau, and they are still building it, miles and miles, up hill and down. Still pushing their road along, too, through the forest, so that next year the Plateau will be perhaps an hour and a half's ride from your car—the Plateau which was haunted ground to the Indians, which only a prospector had seen before Clint Woods explored it 13 years ago, and suddenly lost his heart to it, until he had to give up business in town and devote the rest of his life to it.

STILL MORE PLATEAU

ONE DOUBTS THAT ANY British Columbian in modern times has performed such a prodigy of work almost single-handed in pursuit of a vision. But it has all been worth while. The round, twinkling lakes that Clint Wood found, the trickling rivers through beds of heather, the incredible black trough of Cruikshank Canyon, the trout that were carried in there over the trail as babies and weigh five hungry pounds now—all these things are within reach of city people now, where Clint used to travel for days through trackless jungle, wading rivers between snow banks, sleeping on the ice.

Yes, but Clint will tell you that the Plateau has hardly been scratched yet. There are half a dozen lakes planted with trout where no fisherman has ever cast a fly because there are no trails yet. There will be some day. Some day British Columbia will realize what it has here and do something about it. Meanwhile Clint and his boys are going ahead.

When you walk behind them on the trail you know you are following in the footsteps of real pioneers, of the old mad, incurable breed that made this country. You catch something of their madness before you have been here an hour, and you feel it more and more as you go up over Mount Beecher; then down into the lush alpine meadows where the forest is made of tapered Christmas trees and blue spruces shaped as if by hand; and on to the inky patch of Mackenzie Lake and the toylake swarm of minor lakes around Panther and Mary Wood and Beaufort, with the white and blue bulk of Albert Edward and the Comox Glacier behind everything exactly like a back-drop in a theatre.

This is home to Tex, as to his owner, but I think he sometimes wonders, as he jogs along the trail, with a tenderfoot's bulky pack on his back, who so many people are coming here these days, why they race across the snow in the winter time on strange smooth boards called skis. It makes life hard for a packhorse.

IRELAND LEADING EMPIRE

To the Editor:—Mr. James Morton seems to have got his wires crossed in arguing from the analogy of Ireland that "the area of Czechoslovakia occupied by the Sudeten Germans be restored to the Reich."

Mr. Morton's statement that "Ireland at a critical time was a source of weakness to the Empire" is based on false premises, as 120,000 Ulstermen enlisted for the Great War and 100,000 fighting Irishmen came from Connaught, Munster and Leinster.

Like Wellington, Gillespie, Wolsey, White of Ladysmith and Lord Roberts of pre-war days, so, in the Great War, Kit-chener, French, Wilson, Maude of Bagdad, John and Hugh Gough, Lawrence of Arabia and, in fact, most of the generals who were any good were Irishmen. Willie Redmond, who fell in France, was a brother of John Redmonds, the Irish Nationalist leader. Thousands of other Irishmen of all ranks gave their lives in the Great War.

Lord Carson, an Irishman, was First Lord of the Admiralty during the war, and Lord Beatty, another Irishman, was in command of the Grand Fleet. Irishmen will fight against tyranny, anywhere, any time, anyhow. The spearhead of Washington's army was composed of Irishmen.

In Canada, Darcy McGee, another Irishman, took a most prominent part in procuring self-government and opposed the American or annexation party. There would be very little Empire without Ireland. The originator of "Empire Day" was an Irishman, Lord Meath.

The Empire is being built up on the Irish principles of decentralization and self-government. Last year, incidentally, 11 new parliaments were created in India.

Ireland has never been a "weakness to the Empire." The weakness to the Empire was an inept and money-loving government at Westminster. Irishmen broke away from that incompetent and sordid government to create new parliaments of their own and not to place their necks under the heel of a dictator.

Mr. Morton says "the present situation is one of the evil results of the vindictive Treaty of Versailles." The Treaty of Versailles was written by the financiers. So were the Young Plan and the Dawes Plan. The source of the trouble, not only in Czechoslovakia, but throughout the world, is international finance interlocked with international armaments. Perhaps Mr. Morton can explain away the facts that the Bank of England, which is the largest shareholder in Armstrong-Whitworth, the world's biggest armament firm, advanced loans to Germany and Turkey after the war to enable those nations to rearm, thereby, of course, also forcing the rest of the world into the present armament race, leading to the inevitable Armageddon.

SUGGESTS TROLLEY BUSES

To the Editor:—Has any consideration been given by the councils of greater Victoria to the possibilities of using trolley buses? This type of bus has replaced the street cars in many of the suburbs of London, and is an undoubted success. It is admitted that they are not suitable for the congested areas in the heart of the city, but the suburbs, where they are running, are busier than many of the main arteries of Victoria or Vancouver. These London buses two deckers, carry over 70 passengers and are a great improvement on the present day motor buses. They are almost noiseless, have practically no vibration, start and stop smoothly, and pick up much quicker than a motor bus, especially on hills. They have the same advantage over the street cars that the motor buses have, in that they keep their own side of the road, can pass in and out of traffic, and pull up to the curb to discharge passengers. Motor buses are seldom free from fumes inside, and poison the air outside, especially if they use diesel oil.

Trolley buses, using electricity, are a great improvement from a health standpoint.

The buses would require the overhead trolley wires which are there now on the main streets, and it is on these routes that I suggest they could be used.

The B.C. Electric could possibly find it good business to present the overhead trolley wires to the councils and in return the councils would fix up the roads, either filling up the car tracks or rebuilding the roads, and also taking electricity for the operation of the buses.

Your readers who have traveled in these trolley buses will remember the quiet and comfort of this very modern means of travel, and I believe will agree with me that if final decisions have not been made this should be investigated.

Horse Races Draw Large Crowds in Soviet Russia as Well as in Victoria.

By PETER STURSBURG

IN RUSSIA.

EVERY SECOND DAY there are regular horse races in Moscow, with derbies on general, day and special holidays.

I went to the races one ordinary day. The Hippodrome, where they are held, was built during Czarist times. The palatial, though unbecomingly grandstand was not being kept in the best repair, but the grounds and the great double track and the stables were in perfect condition.

The crowd at the races was not large as Soviet crowds go. Except for the shirt sleeves, which they are held, were built during Czarist times. The palatial, though unbecomingly grandstand was not being kept in the best repair, but the grounds and the great double track and the stables were in perfect condition.

The crowd at the races was not large as Soviet crowds go. Except for the shirt sleeves, which they are held, were built during Czarist times. The palatial, though unbecomingly grandstand was not being kept in the best repair, but the grounds and the great double track and the stables were in perfect condition.

My Russian interpreter had never been to the races before. It was just as much an experience for him as it was for me, and he was very much interested, though somewhat disturbed by the whole business.

Just look how terribly excited they are," he said, pointing to a group arguing over a racing form. He seemed to regard these people very much as we would regard drug addicts.

Betting was on a totalizer system. There are two types of tickets—express tickets where the punter picks the first two horses in a single race, and double tickets where he selected the first two horses in two races. There was no betting on the nose, as there were never more than five horses in a race.

When we walked past the rows of people in front of the totalizers, my interpreter became very worried. He shook his head and said to me:

"You know, I consider this nothing but gambling."

Later on when a race had just ended, he remarked in all seriousness:

"I would never gamble. According to my opinion, that grey horse was the best, and it came in last."

The horse races began at 5 o'clock in the afternoon and went on till 10 o'clock at night. Altogether there was a total of 16 races—an equal number of trotting and galloping events.

In my next article I will tell of an interview I had with the assistant-director of the race-track.

NO MAN COULD have been more scornful of his best-paying customers than the assistant director of the Hippodrome, the race-track in Moscow. A thick-set horse-looking man with a clipped moustache, the assistant director had ridden with Bud-yonny, the great Red cavalry leader, who is patron saint of all horse-breeding in the Soviet Union.

First and above everything he emphasized that race-tracks in the U.S.S.R. were primarily testing grounds for the state stables.

"The betting crowd you see here today is no crowd at all, but a small bunch of people who are nervously sick," the assistant director said. In a few years there would be no more of this gambling, he declared.

"Do you think you can attract a crowd to horse races without gambling?" I asked.

"Certainly," he replied. "We have tens of thousands in the Voroshilovski Cavalieresti who come just to see horse-back riding and to take part in it."

"If you are against gambling, why do you allow it?"

"The Soviet Government is against drinking, but provides vodka," he said. "If we did not allow gambling at horse races, private and illegal bookmakers would spring up."

His contempt for the racing crowd was best shown when he declared:

"They are not workers. They are big shots, engineers and such like, and we make them pay. We take 35 per cent of all their betting."

When he told me this, the assistant director drew his finger significantly across his throat. From the Moscow Hippodrome alone the Soviet Government receives $15,000,000 roubles (nearly $3,000,000 at the official rate of exchange) a year from the totalizers.

By the way there is no creche for the race goers; that is how low they are in the Socialist scale of things.

The subject of betting was distasteful to the assistant director. He wanted to talk about horses.

"We have horses here which you would only dream of in America," he said. "You may smile, but it is true. One of our greatest stallions, Olov, would be worth $500,000 in your country."

THE HEPBURN-KING CORRESPONDENCE

From Toronto Saturday Night

The newspaper files in recent months have been much too full of unfinished correspondence consisting of violent protests on the part of Mr. Hepburn and dignified rebuttals on the part of Mr. Mackenzie King; and in most of these the facts, and in all of them the dignity, have been on the side of the Dominion Prime Minister.

DR. MANION'S SPEECHES

Brantford Expositor

It is just possible that Dr. R. J. Manion, the new Leader of the federal Conservative Party, has been somewhat extravagant in his use of language in discussing Canadian problems. His statement that there must be "reform or revolution" was hardly applicable to Canadians nurtured in British traditions, and who believe that parliamentary government affords opportunity for every kind of social reform.

Better English

1. What is wrong with this sentence? "I saw a couple of men come out of the house." "What is the correct pronunciation of 'cross'?" 3. Which one of these words is misspelled? Imaginery, effrontery, presbytery.

4. What does the word "exonerate" mean?

5. What is a word beginning with ob that means "hardened in feeling"?

Answers

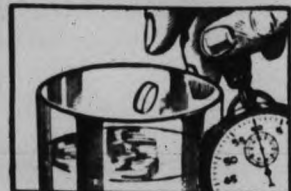

1. Say, "I saw two men come out of the house." 2. Pronounce the o as in loss, not as in of. 3. Imaginary. 4. To clear, as from accusation. "The evidence will exonerate him." 5. Obdurate.

READY TO BRING YOU RELIEF IN MINUTES

THE REASON "ASPIRIN" WORKS SO FAST

Drop an "Aspirin" tablet into a tumbler of water.

By the time it hits the bottom of the glass it is dissolving.

This speed of disintegration enables "Aspirin" tablets to start "taking hold" of headaches and similar pains a few minutes after taking.

You can pay as high as you want for remedies claimed to relieve the pain of Headache, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Sciatica, etc. But the medicine so many doctors generally approve—the one used by thousands of families daily—is "Aspirin".

Simply take 2 "Aspirin" tablets with a half glass of water. Repeat, if necessary, according to directions.

"Aspirin" tablets are made in Canada. "Aspirin" is the registered trade-mark of the Bayer Company, Limited of Windsor, Ontario. Look for the name Bayer in the form of a cross on every tablet.

Decision in the Strange Case of "LOVE AT FIRST SIGHT"

"LOST" Vilma Todd was obliged to return all the money that had been advanced to her, the court holding that this money was not in the nature of a gift, but in consideration of their engagement and to enable her to fulfill it.

As a matter of law, it is a general rule in most states, that a gift by a competent party, made perfect by a delivery and an acceptance, is irrevocable by the donor. It is a voluntary, gratuitous transfer of personal property by one person to another.

But, in this case, the sums given were not absolute. They were conditional and when that condition failed, a right of action resulted in which the rejected lover might recover his money.

There is not the slightest doubt of the sincerity of Herbert Wallace's love. He did not seek the return of his money, until he realized that he had been surely jilted for another and that his romance was beyond recall.

The court found that Vilma had no good or sufficient reason for breaking the engagement. But, maybe she did! Which is better, to go through with a marriage, regardless of change of heart, or back out before it is too late?

This is a true case. Reference of citation may be had by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to "Bela Lanan—Court Reporter."

Burnside Pupils Receive Awards

Rev. Dr. Andrew Reid is Guest Speaker at Commencement Exercises

Commencement exercises were held at Burnside School yesterday afternoon. An impressive program was carried out in the presence of last year's Grade 8, the upper grades of the present school, a large number of parents and friends of the school and the speaker, Rev. Dr. Andrew Reid, pastor of the neighboring (Centennial) Church.

The proceedings opened by prayer conducted by Dr. Reid. The principal, John S. Dee, spoke of the success of the school in boys' and girls' interschool sports considering the smallness of the school; the boys not losing a match in the senior B football last winter, losing but the final match against Oaklands in the senior basketball league, and the girls being runners-up in both the senior girls' basketball and baseball competitions. At the music festival the choir met with commendation. Within the school the friendly relation between teachers and pupils he hoped would continue and become the nucleus of a larger growth by the formation of an old scholars' association.

The successful students of Grade 8 were presented with their entrance certificates by Mrs. Smith, the wife of the president of the Burnside Parent-Teacher Association.

College Forms Student Groups

Organization of Extramural Activities Under Way at Craigdarroch

The "freshies" will shed their goldstarred blue fezzes tonight. For a week, since Victoria College opened, first-year students have worn the paper headgear which is symbolic of academic inferiority to the sophomores. They will be freed of that insignia this evening at the official dance the second-year students give to the newcomers and will be recognized as full-fledged members of the Alma Mater Society thereafter.

Organization work in general lecture routines was completed during the week with the student body standing just one above that of last year when the enrollment was 217.

With classwork in full swing, various student groups were formed, the Players' Club naming officers yesterday. Throughout next week other extramural activities will be started with the organization of the Men's Discussion Club, the Women's Undergraduate Society, the International Relations Club, the Literary Arts Club, the Student Christian Movement and the Science Club.

PLAYERS' CLUB

Students who took two leading roles in last year's college production were elected president and secretary-treasurer of the Players' Club, Cynthia Murgrove and Eileen Walker being chosen for those respective offices yesterday.

Vivien Combe was named director and Mel Hughes stage-manager. This year the club will produce a comedy and will hold tryouts for the various parts in the College Library next Wednesday evening at 8.

A cast of eight or nine will be finally selected for the presentation of the play in the spring.

Following the procedure of the last two or three years, the College is again conducting a discussion class in current events as a section of its History I course. Each Thursday the class is divided into two groups to discuss pros and cons of some event of international import. This week the Czechoslovakian situation formed the subject.

Organization of athletic activities opened during the week with the rugby club drafting plans for the coming season. In the near future badminton, Basketball, grass hockey and other sports will be given attention.

Six Hunters Are Dead in Oregon

PORTLAND — Probably the heaviest toll of lives in the history of Oregon sports was being chalked up today with six men dead since the deer hunting season opened Tuesday.

With nearly a month of the season left, as many deaths had been recorded already as occurred in the entire season of 1937.

In the area of northern California, Oregon and Washington, 10 hunters have died, one a woman, compared to nine in the full season last year.

Saanich Fair Entries Large

Norman W. Whittaker, K.C., M.P.P., to Open Exhibition Next Wednesday

Norman W. Whittaker, K.C., M.P.P., will officially open the 70th annual fall fair of the North and South Saanich Agricultural Society on Wednesday next at 2.30 at the Saanichton Hall.

Strong committees in charge have reversed and brought up to date the various sections and new classes have been added. The directors have aimed at making the Saanich fair truly representative of the Peninsula, and have been greatly encouraged by the entries which have been sent in, and are still being received.

New buildings, replacing those lost by fire, are now in the course of construction, and will be available by fair time.

Boys and girls under 18 years of age are being invited to be exhibitors in the new section sponsored by the Rotary Club for flowers, vegetables and seeds. Cash prizes are being offered, and a challenge cup has been donated by D. D. McTavish to the school obtaining most points. Among the various cups for competition is the Dr. S. F. Tolmie Cup for best draft team; City of Victoria Cup for the Jersey R.O.P. class; Bank of Commerce Cup in dairy herd class, and Royal Bank of Canada Cup for exhibitor obtaining most points in the pure bred Jersey classes. The Tulloch Kennels Cup will be competed for in the sheep dog trials, and in connection with these trials Andrew McFarlane of Coghlin, B.C., will give an exhibition of two sheep dogs working.

There will be the usual Saanich school sports and school work sections, and the ever popular Highland dancing events which draw competitors from the mainland and all over the island. There will be 17 different events, comprising piping and dancing.

Fair Day is recognized as a civic holiday in Saanich, and business houses in North Saanich will also be closed. A special trip with special rates will be made by the Cy Peck, Salt Spring ferry, for the benefit of the citizens of the island.

S.P.C.A. Care Given Horses

Saliva Tests Given Willows Thoroughbreds Inspector Reports

In the interests of protecting the stock, saliva tests were again taken from racehorses which ran in Victoria at this year's races, George Allen, S.P.C.A. inspector, reported at the monthly meeting of the society this week.

Inspector Allen said the standard of thoroughbred stock here this year was higher and a large number of old horses had been eliminated from running. The race track had been greatly improved since last year but was still a little soft underneath, he reported.

Inquiries have been received concerning the conditions under which horses and mules are worked underground at the coal mines. Many people were under the erroneous impression that they are kept in darkness but the inspector reported after visits to the mines of the island that general conditions were good. The mines are lighted by electricity and under the Coal Mines Regulation Act provision is made to safeguard animals which must be provided with adequate stable accommodation and ventilation with pure air amounting to not less than 300 cubic feet per minute for each horse or mule. The majority of animals work eight hours a day, those on longer shifts being worked only part of the time. The mine management maintains farms to which the animals are brought from time to time for rest above ground. The act provides that a provincial mine inspector shall visit every mine within his jurisdiction at least once a month.

As no committee meeting was held in August the inspector's report was a lengthy one, fifty-five cases were attended and 502 animals and birds inspected during the two months. These figures did not include animals at the Willows during exhibition week. Cases of cruelty or neglect should be reported to the inspector, G. A. Allen, phone E 8351; to A. R. Sherwood, secretary-treasurer, phone E 7556, or to the office, 304 Jones Block, Fort Street.

Committees Busy On Hospital's Yearly Ball

Mrs. J. W. Benning convening Jubilee Ball

Mrs. J. W. Benning is general convener of the annual Hospital Ball to be held at the Empress Hotel on Friday evening, October 28, under the joint auspices of the Senior and Junior Auxiliaries of the Royal Jubilee Hospital. Mrs. Benning will be assisted in the arrangements by Mrs. Hobart Molson, Mrs. J. W. Spencer, and Mrs. John A. Stewart, with Mrs. M. R. Jamieson representing the Senior W.A. and Miss Vida Shandley, the Junior W.A.

Always one of the highlights of the autumn season, the ball promises to be an outstanding success, if the interest shown in it already is any indication.

Mrs. Chas. Watson is superintending the decorations, which promise to be on a lavish and unusual scale. The juniors are staging a floor show under the capable direction of Miss Thelma Ackerman, and Mrs. Hermann Robertson is arranging for fortune-telling for those who find the occasion propitious for such auguries.

For the entertainment of friends of the hospital who are non-dancers, bridge is being arranged under the convener'ship of Mrs. J. D. Hunter, and mah jong will be convoked by Mrs. E. G. Prior. Tables may be reserved with either of them or from Mrs. J. W. Lennox and Mrs. Lennox Irving, who are assisting them on the committee.

Victoria Lodge No. 83, Order Daughters of St. George, held their meeting Wednesday evening. After the business meeting partner whist was played. The first prizes went to Mrs. E. Skelland and Mrs. B. Harper; consolation, Mrs. F. Thompson and Mrs. E. Larman. Refreshments were served at the close of the evening.

Mark Daughter's Coming-of-age At Dance

An enjoyable dance was held recently in the K. of P. Hall when Mr. and Mrs. Spencer J. Aspinwall, Beechwood Ave., entertained some 90 guests in honor of their eldest daughter, Emily, who celebrated her twenty-first birthday.

The supper table was centred by a bouquet of sweetheart roses in a silver bowl, pink tapers in silver candlesticks and a three-tier birthday cake decorated with silver and pink. A profusion of flowers decorated the hall, and dancing was supplied by the Haymakers' orchestra. A feature of the evening was the singing of Mr. William Bell of the Naval Barracks and Mr. Bob Wormleighton, both of whom proved very popular with the guests, who demanded encores.

The guests included Misses Elsie Ralph, Florence Byett, Gladys and Elsie Hawthorne, Mabel Lansell, Elsie Merriman, Doris and Flossie Driver, Elva Ferguson, Betty Lansell, Gladys Fea, Betty Forsyth, Dorothy Hill, "Bunny" Harper, Blanche Manacks, Iris Ryles, Jean Milton, Mae Corness, Alice Craig, Vera Mann, Jessie McMillan, Lillian Mason, Doreen Rowlandson, Sylvia Schofield, Pat and Lettie Johnson and Thelma, Joan and Mickey Aspinwall.

E. McAllister, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Trickett, Mr. and Mrs. Hawthorne, Mr. and Mrs. Reg Graves, Mrs. E. Graves, Mr. C. Graves, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Graves, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Graves, Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Hawkins, Miss Marion Mitchell, Mrs. H. Bimie and Mr. Ron Cummings.

Plans for the annual mission-ary sale of work to be held in the Memorial Hall on Wednesday, November 16, will be discussed by the members of Christ Church Cathedral Senior Evening Branch Women's Auxiliary at a special meeting called for Thursday, September 29, at 8 p.m., in the Guild Room, Memorial Hall.

The meeting will later be joined by the members of the Business Women's Branch W.A. and representatives from the Cathedral Girls' W.A. The sale will be conducted under the auspices of the three branches.

Joan, (Brownie) Peebles noted Canadian contralto who has sung with Edward Johnson, Lawrence Tibbett, Richard Bonelli, Rose Hampton and others, and has received much praise from leading New York critics. She will appear in recital with Theo. Karle, American tenor, at the Empire Theatre on Tuesday evening, October 4, under the auspices of the Victoria Musical Art Society. Miss Peebles is a sister of Dr. Alton Peebles of Victoria and has won an international reputation as a singer.

Miss Benson Is Lovely Bride

Banker's Daughter
Wed Today To
Mr. James Seattle

Two well-known families were united by the marriage solemnized at 2 o'clock this afternoon at Christ Church Cathedral between Isabelle de Graessie, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. D. Benson of The Esplanade, Oak Bay, to Mr. James Wilson Redhead Seattle, only son of the late Mr. W. R. Seattle, and of Mrs. Seattle, Linden Avenue, Victoria.

Rev. A. E. G. Hendy performed the ceremony in the presence of a large congregation, and Mr. Stanley Bulley, Cathedral organist, played the bridal music.

Mr. Benson gave his daughter in marriage. She was radiantly pretty in her lovely wedding gown of silver satin and lace, made in redingote style and flaring at the back into a full court train. The high-necked frock of satin, paneled with lace, was buttoned down the front with self-covered buttons, and the redingote of lace with its long tight-fitting sleeves, was finished with an upstanding Elizabethan collar. Her knee-length veil of filmy illusion was worn in cap fashion, with a tiny upstanding brim inset with lace and caught at the ears with orange blossoms. Her bridal bouquet was a shower of butterfly roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Honor Benson was her sister's only bridesmaid, charmingly gowned in a Victorian hoop dress of powder blue taffeta, trimmed with self bows, with sweetheart neckline and brief puff sleeves. With it she wore a becoming poke bonnet of amethyst taffeta, faced with shirred taffeta in the powder-blue shade and tied beneath the chin with powder-blue ribbons. She carried a shower bouquet of yellow marguerites, yellow pansies, blue delphinium and purple violets.

Mr. Patrick Schreiber was best man, and the ushers were Mr. George Kirkpatrick (Edmonton), Mr. Goldwyn Terry, Mr. Robert Phipps and Mr. Logan Mayhew.

HOUSE RECEPTION

After the ceremony a large attended reception was held at the parental home of the bride, Gladioli and chrysanthemums in the autumn tones and masses of yellow marguerites were used throughout the reception rooms. Mrs. Benson received the guests in a handsome floor-length gown of matrix blue Omar crepe, with silver metallic trimming on the sleeves and at the neck, with which she wore a wide-brimmed picture hat of black velvet. Her corsage bouquet was of gardenias. Assisting her was the bride's mother, of the bride's groom, who was smartly gowned in Mediterranean blue lace, floor-length, with which she wore a black hat, trimmed with a small ostrich feather and finished with a buff black veil. She wore a corsage bouquet of Talisman roses.

The buffet luncheon was served from a table centred with a beautiful bowl of white gladioli, butterfly roses and yellow marguerites, and as the bride cut the three-tier wedding cake, Mr. F. E. Winslow proposed the toast to her health and happiness.

Later, Mr. and Mrs. Seattle left for a honeymoon south, the bride traveling in an imported Paris model frock of dove grey with rib-row skirt, trimmed with saffron brown, with a handsome wolf collar. Her hat was a California model pillbox, in brown felt with a brief veil. On their return they will reside at the Lee Oaks Apts., Fort Street.

Y.M.C.A. Autumn Tea At Mrs. C. S. Henley's

Mrs. C. S. Henley is lending her charming home, 1301 Rockland Avenue, for the annual autumn tea, under the auspices of the ladies' auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. The affair is to be held on Friday afternoon, October 21, and a novel and interesting program is being arranged.

Anyone interested in the work that is being done for the young men who make their home at the "Y" and for the boys and young men who avail themselves of its many club facilities will be cordially welcomed.

A country fair will be held in St. Paul's Parish Hall, Esquimalt, Thursday next, under the auspices of the Esquimalt Hall Association. It will be opened at 3 by Mrs. Sara Wilby and supper will be served at 6. There will be the usual attractions: Afternoon tea, home cooking, plain sewing, house-hoosie, candy, novelties and tea cup reading. Military 500 will be played in the evening, commencing at 8 sharp. Poultry and other good prizes and refreshments.

Victoria Chapter No. 17, Order of the Eastern Star, will hold its annual fall dance and bridge on October 24 at the Shrine Hall.

MISS OLIVE ELFORD

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Elford, 1436 Elford Street, announce the engagement of their younger daughter, Olive Thelma, to Mr. Robert Douglas MacLennan, younger son of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. MacLennan, 1744 Fort Street. The wedding will take place on October 15 at 2.30 in Christ Church Cathedral.

SAWATSKY-GALVIN

A pretty wedding took place yesterday morning at the Bishop's Palace when Rev. Father Crothers united in matrimony, Mary, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Galvin, and Henry Sawatsky, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Sawatsky of Saskatchewan.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, looked charming in a brown floral taffeta dress, fashioned on dirndl lines with which she wore a jade green jigger coat and halo hat of brown felt. Her accessories were brown and green and the corsage bouquet of pink carnations and rosebuds.

Miss Genevieve Mattinson, cousin of the bride, was her only attendant and wore a sand-colored crepe de chine frock with coat to match, brown accessories and corsage of carnations and sweet peas. Mr. J. F. Galvin supported the groom.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents, only relatives and close friends of the couple being present. Mrs. E. J. Galvin, wearing navy crepe de chine, with brown accessories, received the guests, assisted by her sister, Mrs. F. Mattinson, of Vancouver.

The happy couple then left for an up-land honeymoon trip and upon their return will reside in Victoria.

Out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mrs. Wm. Groves of Vancouver, Mr. and Mrs. D. Fay, Pembroke, Ontario; Mrs. F. Mattinson, Genevieve and Marjorie Mattinson and J. F. Galvin, all of Vancouver.

The bride and groom were recipients of many lovely gifts among which was a beautiful carving set and table lamp from the Empress Hotel staff, where the groom is employed.

COCHRANE-COOK

A pretty wedding was solemnized on Tuesday by Rev. Dr. Dafoe in Calvary Baptist Church, Chemainus, when Gladys Margaret, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Cook, was united in marriage to Alexander Wilson Cochrane of Marpole, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Cochrane, Chemainus.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a princess gown of white crepe-back satin with high Elizabethan collar and long sleeves, a long French em brodered veil and wreath of orange blossom. She carried a shower bouquet of sweetheart roses and white snapdragons.

She was attended by Miss Laurel Cook (Duncan), gowned in peach net over peach taffeta, with jacket and halo cap of peach net, and carrying a bouquet of bronze chrysanthemums. The groom's brother, Thomas Cochrane, was best man. The ushers were the bride's brother, Thomas Cook, and Eric Knight. During the signing of the register Miss Phyllis Cook sang "O Promise Me."

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, the bride and groom standing under an arch of pink and white asters and white wedding bell overhead. The bride's table was covered with a handmade cutwork cloth, centred with the four-tier wedding cake, and tall tapers in crystal holders.

Mr. and Mrs. Cochrane left by motor to spend the honeymoon in Victoria and Seattle, and will make their home in Marpole, B.C. The bride chose for traveling a dirndl dress in brown, a coat of spice rust velvet with lapin collar and a braided brown halo hat, and accessories to match.

The monthly meeting of the Major John Hebbden Gillespie Chapter, I.O.D.E., will be held at the home of Miss Ina Henderson, 1007 Linden Avenue, Monday evening at 8.

Provincial W.C.T.U. Name Officers

At the closing sessions of the provincial W.C.T.U. convention in New Westminster Thursday, the plan of work for the coming year and the report of the resolutions committee were considered and both were adopted after some discussion.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Jas. Gray; vice-presidents, Mrs. Jas. Lade, Mrs. W. C. Kelley, Mrs. F. W. Laing (Victoria); corresponding secretary, Miss G. Fulton; recording secretary, Mrs. Skilton; treasurer, Mrs. John Macpherson; "Y" secretary, Miss Edna Grant; L.T.L., Mrs. G. A. Drake.

Thanks were expressed to those who had arranged a drive to points of interest in and around the city.

With thanks to the press, to the church officials and to all who tendered hospitality, the 55th convention was declared closed.

Marionette Library In New Location

Of much interest to booklovers of Victoria is the move by the Marionette Library to a new location in the Sussex Building on Douglas Street.

Purchased four years ago by Mrs. G. L. Nixon and D. Nixon, the Marionette has become well known to the reading public.

The new library will be designed along lines only recently worked out in New York and London, with novel ideas in shelving arrangement. The additional space in the new store will accommodate an up-to-date line of office and personal stationery, a wide selection of new books for sale, and an enlarged assortment of adult games. A lounge section will be provided for the comfort of patrons.

The Gleaners Mission Circle of First United Church held their first meeting of the autumn term at the home of Mrs. M. L. McLennan, 311 Vancouver Street. Miss Edna Maundrell presided. The meeting opened with the devotional led by Miss Jean Wilson. Mrs. W. Muncy told the circle of the plans for a rally of all the circles, to be held at the Metropolitan Church, October 17, in place of the regular meeting. A solo, "My Task," was rendered by Miss Jean Wilson, accompanied by Miss Lauretta McCall. The guest speaker for the evening was Mrs. W. Freeman who gave a challenging talk on missions. Refreshments were served by the hostess.

Guide Camp Fund Needing $300

Since the beginning of July the Victoria Division of Girl Guides have held successful camps on their new site at Sooke. Enjoyable camps have been held by four groups of Guides, two of Rangers and there was also a week-end camp for Guides. In all over 150 Guides and Guides have occupied the site during July and August and plans are now being made by some companies to take small parties of Guides out for week-end visits during the winter months.

Through the efforts of the camp fund committee and the generosity of local firms, many of whom made gifts of building materials, the house (which was formally opened by Mrs. E. W. Hamber in July) is so commodious and well appointed that it will be possible to use the site all the year round and in all weathers. There is ample room for a full company of Guides when it proves necessary to sleep under a roof, and the big fireplace given by the Brownies is an abiding joy in wet or chilly weather.

A little over $300 is still needed to clear off all indebtedness on the building and site and the camp fund committee and the Guides are now seeking methods of raising this sum. Donations for the purpose from friends of the movement would be most welcome. Payments may be made to A. B. Morkill, honorary treasurer, Canadian Bank of Commerce, Douglas and Cormorant Streets branch, or to Miss A. B. Cooke, honorary secretary, 2209 Oak Bay Avenue.

Club Organization At High School

The organization meetings of clubs under the new club system at Victoria High School met with such enthusiasm yesterday that nearly all the clubs had an overflowing membership. Most of the clubs had around a hundred students wishing to join. The swimming and life-saving club proved the most popular having 180 members.

A meeting of the sponsors of the club will be held next week to see what is to be done about the overflowing membership. It is possible that instead of allowing a student to become a member of two clubs, meeting on alternate Thursdays, students will be limited to membership in one club only.

Clubs and sponsors are Beta Delta (boys' public speaking), W. L. Hardie; Portia (girls' public speaking), Miss J. Roberts; choir, S. Bulley; orchestra, A. Prescott; mathematics, J. Armstrong; geology, W. E. Cook; boys' gym, W. A. Roper; current events, Miss I. Thomas and Miss H. Sargent; journalism, Mrs. H. Hodgson; dramatics, Miss E. Cameron; boat, C. L. Campbell; camera, H. Gilliland; chess, N. Harwood; booklovers, Miss D. Hay; science, W. H. Webber; stamp, Miss A. McLeod; swimming and life-saving, Miss H. Doull and D. Smith; home nursing, Miss I. Adams; and French, Miss M. Hamilton.

Prefects at Victoria High School were named. They are selected from matriculation students and their main duty is to maintain order around the school. To be named a prefect is one of the highest honors that can be bestowed upon a student. Prefects are Annie MacLean, Div. 1, Josephine Wilson, Div. 1, Martha Armstrong, Div. 3, Helen Dixon, Div. 3, Joan Gill, Div. 5, Edythe Drake, Div. 3, Joyce Dalziel, Div. 5, Barbara Hutchison, Div. 5, Hazel Hutchinson, Div. 5, Susette Plimley, Div. 1, Doreen Cox, Div. 7, and Jean Fenwick, Div. 7, William Blissett, Div. 3, Walter Knotts, Div. 1, William Brown, Div. 2, Frank Mylrea, Div. 2, James Wood, Div. 2, George Low, Div. 3, Norman Willis, Div. 4, Leslie Wong, Div. 4, Douglas Oddy, Div. 6, Richard Wright, Div. 6, and Edwin Carr, Div. 6.

The regular meeting of St. John's W.A. will be held in the Guild room at 2.30 next Tuesday.

Flower Display Held At Lake Hill Hall

An outstanding event of the season's activities of the Lake Hill Women's Institute was the display of flowers and silver tea held on Thursday afternoon in the Community Hall. The guests were welcomed by Mrs. W. Webster, the president.

From the many entries the two most artistically arranged bowls of flowers, judged by popular vote, were first, Miss A. F. Giles, Linwood Avenue; and second Mrs. J. W. Harrison, Royal Oak. The feather fan cushion donated by Mrs. W. P. Lilley was won by Mrs. H. C. Oldfield, Royal Oak.

The displays of needlework, knitting and crochet which won first and third prizes at the Provincial Exhibition were displayed under the direction of the home economics convener, Mrs. T. Myles.

During the tea hour, Miss Phyllis Deaville sang two solos "Bird Songs" and "Little Dutch Garden" for which she was accompanied by Mrs. Grace Deaville. Two dance numbers, a tap dance "Turkey in the Straw" by Miss Betty Spiers and "Acrobatic Dance" by Miss Dorothea Rowlands, pupils of Bette Clair, were given, the pianist was Mrs. Rowland. The program was under the convener'ship of Mrs. K. Massey.

Tea was served under the convener'ship of Mrs. J. M. Findlay, assisted by the Institute members.

New Fox Fur to Be Worn For Fall

By RACHEL GAYMAN
PARIS (CP-Havas) — Coats, tailored suits and ensembles this season are trimmed by preference with long-haired furs chosen from the darker shades.

Fox remains the favorite. Whether silver, red or blue, it is placed at the neckline or as a luxurious collar on a short basque jacket.

The new type of fox fur featured this season is called "Goenland," a sea-grey shade with ice-berg reflections in it. This is found on afternoon ensembles. White fox seems in eclipse.

HAPPY VALLEY

The Happy Valley Parent-Teacher Association held its first afternoon meeting of the winter season on Thursday afternoon at the school. L. B. Matthews, principal, presided for the entertainment which preceded the business meeting. Two choruses and group recitations by the junior pupils, under the direction of Mrs. L. Dixon, preceded a drill by the senior pupils and a recitation by Sylvia Morrow.

Mrs. B. Hancock, president, announced an entertainment would be held in Luxton Hall, October 15, the proceeds to benefit the Halloween party fund. Miss Lucille Maikin, R.N., newly-appointed school nurse, gave an interesting talk on her work and conditions in the Peace River Block.

Under the auspices of the Luxton and Happy Valley Women's Institute a 500 card party will be held in Luxton Hall next Monday evening. Mrs. W. Henderson will act as convener.

Modern Etiquette

By ROBERTA LEE

1. In an office, would you introduce yourself to a client as "Gertrude Allen" or "Miss Allen"?
2. Should you write personal letters during office hours?
3. Should you make personal telephone calls during business hours?
4. Should you repair your make-up while in the office?
5. If a man and woman are in a crowded street car together and someone offers her a seat, should he lift his hat to the other man?

What would you do if—
A friend telephones during office hours on a personal matter and prolongs the call while you have important business waiting.

- (a) Let him finish rather than hurt his feelings?
- (b) Say, "I'm sorry. I'll have to stop talking for I have a customer waiting?"
- (c) Say, "I'll call you back during my lunch hour?"

ANSWERS

1. The latter.
2. No.
3. Not habitually.
4. No. Go to the dressing room.
5. Yes. Best "What Would You Do?" solution—(b) or (c).

The regular meeting of the daughters of Pity will be held in the Nurses' Home, Jubilee Hospital, Tuesday evening at 8.

Lieut. Roland Swinley Dyer, R.C.H.A., and his bride, the former Jean Campbell of Victoria, photographed as they were leaving St. James' Presbyterian Church, London, Ont., after their wedding on Saturday afternoon, September 10. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. D. E. Campbell of Linden Avenue, and the late Mr. Duncan E. Campbell. They will make their home in Kingston.

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

In honor of their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Clive D. Campbell, a recent bride and groom, Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Campbell, Foul Bay Road, entertained at dinner recently. The wedding was held on Saturday, September 10, at the home of Mrs. D. E. Campbell, Linden Avenue, and the late Mr. Duncan E. Campbell. They will make their home in Kingston.

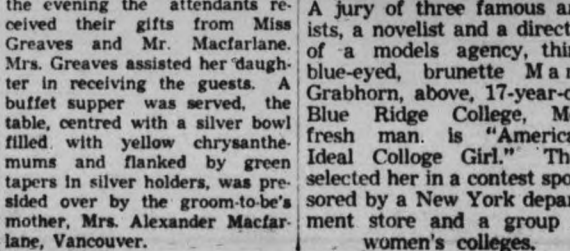

A pleasant evening was spent on Thursday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Hewlett, Saseenos, when the members of the Women's Auxiliary to the Sooke branch of the Canadian Legion, B.E.S.L., met in honor of Miss Elsie Hine, a fellow member, whose marriage will take place next month. Games were played and dainty refreshments were served by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. D. W. Ferguson. Following tea Mrs. E. J. Syrett, president of the Women's Auxiliary, presented Miss Hine with a baking dish.

Mrs. P. E. Corby, provincial organizing secretary, I.O.G.E., will leave tomorrow for Vancouver from where she will motor to Penikese, to attend the semi-annual meeting of the Provincial Chapter to be held there on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Following this she will go up the Okanagan Valley to visit the chapters at Enderby and Vernon, leaving there on October 1, for the Kootenays, where meetings have been arranged for her at Castlegar, Trail, Nelson and Kootenay. Mrs. Corby will return to the coast by way of Spokane and Seattle.

Miss Mildred Peatt was guest of honor at a cup and saucer shower on Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Gerald Laverton, Munro Street. The lovely gifts were presented to Miss Peatt in a prettily decorated yellow and white basket. The invited guests were Mrs. Peatt, Mrs. L. Peatt, Mrs. E. Gaucher, Mrs. Whitfield, Mrs. Seward, Mrs. E. Shields, Mrs. B. Shields, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. J. Goodall, Mrs. C. Smith, Mrs. A. March, Mrs. S. Smith, Mrs. R. Burnett, Mrs. G. Eade, Mrs. C. Sweet, Mrs. N. Brayshaw, Mrs. Fred Pitt, Mrs. Palmer, Mrs. C. Brown, and the Misses Mildred Peatt, K. Goodall, E. Brown, Mary Thorne and Orca Lamer.

Miss Hilda Glen Greaves and Mr. Allister Macfarlane, Vancouver, whose marriage will take place tonight at St. Paul's Naval and Garrison Church, Esquimalt, entertained informally last night about 60 of their friends at the home of Miss Greaves' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred W. Greaves, 1228 Juno Street, the party being in honor of the attendants, Miss Dola Greaves, maid of honor; Misses Helen and Alice Parkinson and Miss Winnifred McAdams, bridesmaids; Mr. Jeffrey Whitehead, best man; and Dr. Dimery Johnson, Mr. Roger Phillips (Vancouver) and Mr. Huntley Miller, ushers. During the evening the attendants received their gifts from Miss Greaves and Mr. Macfarlane. Mrs. Greaves assisted her daughter in receiving the guests. A buffet supper was served, the table, centred with a silver bowl filled with yellow chrysanthemums and flanked by green tapers in silver holders, was presided over by the groom-to-be's mother, Mrs. Alexander Macfarlane, Vancouver.

A jury of three famous artists, a novelist and a director of a models agency, think blue-eyed, brunette Mary Grabhorn, above, 17-year-old Blue Ridge College, Md., fresh man, is "America's Ideal College Girl." They selected her in a contest sponsored by a New York department store and a group of women's colleges.

Costs Delay Television

PHILADELPHIA — Two outstanding hurdles that will have to be cleared by its backers before television can become a nationwide form of entertainment are the high initial cost of equipment and the preparation difficulty and great expense of programs, Albert F. Murray, director of television research for the Philco Radio and Television Corporation, told the Engineers' Club here.

England's experimental commercial station has absorbed more than a million and a half dollars during the last year and over two million is set aside for the coming year. "The cost of an installation, even of modest size, is around a million dollars," he declared.

"Already Britain finds that their program cost per hour is about $1,000. Television demands more than any other known form of entertainment," Mr. Murray added in indicating that the bill for American television entertainment will be extremely high.

Since the ultra short waves that must be used in broadcasting sight signals travel only as far as the horizon, unlike radio frequencies used for today's commercial broadcasts, expensive coaxial cable or radio relay stations will be needed in order to cover the United States with a network of transmitters.

The direct televising of news events and sports programs as well as evening replays from motion pictures of events occurring during the afternoon will constitute an important source of television programs.

"Will it be difficult to select programs which have a wide appeal? I believe it will," Mr. Murray declared in critical vein. "The lack of interesting program material is troubling the British Broadcasting Corporation in their daily 3-hour television program."

W.I. Speakers' Group

The Royal Oak Speakers' Group are now entering their fourth year and the first meeting will be held early in October. This group meets every week and is held under the auspices of the Royal Oak Women's Institute and the night schools of the Board of Education with Mr. F. Cariss as instructor. Of great educational value these classes have proved very popular and information will be gladly given to those who would care to join.

CENTENARIAN DIES

CAMPBELLTON, N.B. (AP)—The funeral of Miss Sarah Jane Doherty, oldest woman in New Brunswick, was held here yesterday. She was 104 years old last January 30. At that time four members of her family total 361 years. Her brothers then were Isaac, 96, Vancouver; David, 85, of Charlottetown, N.B.; and Milton, 76, of Bathurst, N.B. A pioneer of the Klondike gold rush of 1896, David died this year.

WOMEN'S CANADIAN CLUB

Mr. Alan Crawley of Winnipeg will address the Women's Canadian Club on Tuesday afternoon at the Empress Hotel, on the subject of "The Pleasure of Poetry." Mr. Crawley comes with the reputation of a delightful speaker and his address promises to be of much literary interest. Mrs. T. Harry Johns will be the soloist.

Conditions Here Are Improved

J. A. Bennell Addresses Real Estate Board Luncheon Meeting

A decided improvement on real estate conditions in Victoria and district was noted by J. A. Bennell of the Royal Trust Company at a luncheon meeting of the Real Estate Board of Victoria in Spencer's private dining-room yesterday.

The speaker mentioned the home building and improvement plans as aids during the last year in improving conditions.

Mr. Bennell stressed the fine work being done by the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau in bringing business into the city through the medium of tourists.

The airport at Patricia Bay would also benefit the city.

In Victoria there was always a lack of four or five-roomed bungalows for rent. Rentals of office buildings in town were also better in comparison with two or three years ago, Mr. Bennell said.

Considerable discussion centred around the possible re-routing of transportation services after the completion of the B.C. Electric Railway Company's franchise in December. It was decided to choose a committee to co-operate with a committee of the Chamber of Commerce against the changing of the routes. Re-routing would create new business areas to compete against the old established sections of business.

F. E. Winslow was named to head and select a committee of five as a delegation to the Court of Revision assessment roll to ask for consideration of lessening the taxes on single-houseed acreage in the city of Victoria.

David Leeming was in the chair.

New Stock Market Broadcast on CBR

Beginning Monday, September 26, the B.C. network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will carry a new British Columbia radio feature, replacing the stock market review which formerly has come over the national network from Toronto at 2:45 in the afternoon.

Arrangements for the new service have been made by the Vancouver Stock Exchange in conjunction with the CBC. More news of western issues has been frequently requested to be given with that of eastern securities and major market trends in daily broadcasts. It is in compliance with this demand for up-to-the-hour data on western as well as eastern stocks and stock markets the arrangements for two daily broadcasts have been made.

At 12:30 each day, for a five-minute period there will be broadcast the closing quotations on the various markets, covering principal securities over CBR only.

The main broadcast will be from 2:45 to 3 daily except Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday this broadcast will take place at 10:30 in the morning. These broadcasts will include a general market news summary, quotations from Vancouver, New York, Toronto and Montreal markets, daily averages, metal prices and other information, with more

WHEN THE BASEBALL writers begin their annual fall search for the big league ball player with the most heart, their sergeant-at-arms should march Joseph Paul DiMaggio to the dais of triumph, and call the hunt off for 1938. This is the year, his third in the uniform of the all-victorious New York Yankees, that Joe proved more than his greatness as a ball player. He showed his army of detractors from the Bronx to St. Louis that he's a wearer of the game's red badge of courage.

Giuseppe, a quiet, sensitive fellow of 23, began his hectic though soul-satisfying season by defying the all-powerful Yankee front office with a holdout demand for $40,000. A sum unheard of for a third year player. He got licked—and what a licking it was. With it came snubbery from his mates, catcalls and boos from the fans. How well he took it is shown in his performance. Though hurt to the very quick, he stuck in every game since joining the club, and today finds him coming like the wind down the home stretch of the American League batting championship race. Once more Giuseppe rides high as hero number one of a world championship team. He's a ball player's player.

Badly in need of southern training, Joe missed 10 games at the outset of the season. By Yankee edict his $25,000 salary was docked at the rate of $162 for each game missed—a total of $1,620. Even with such handicaps Joe has done astonishingly well. He's banging at the leaders in batting, runs scored, hits, and runs batted in. He has a chance to sweep all four individual titles.

The general impression is owner Jake Ruppert will refund Giuseppe's $1,620 lost salary, as he did to pitcher Red Ruffing a year ago. If he doesn't, we don't know the grand old colonel, who went out of his way last April to give his young star a lesson for holding out. To his friends the colonel has mentioned DiMaggio's comeback so many times they think the colonel has been doing all that slugging.

DiMaggio is a greatly misunderstood young man. Many fans and ball players accuse him, and unjustly so—of being high hat. Recently when he was given a suit case by admiring fans, Joe felt a victim of his shyness. He merely gulped an almost inaudible "thanks" and walked off the field. One of the donors of the gift felt he had been insulted by a snooty star and didn't mind who heard about it. Later, DiMaggio corrected the wrong impression.

Alex. James, the famous Arsenal forward, has been debarré from club management by the English Football Association. The association states that their decision is based on James' contravention of rule 43. When he ended his career as a player at the close of the 1936-37 season, James became a director of a large pools organization and also wrote a series of very outspoken articles for a weekly newspaper.

These articles are thought to have influenced the association in their decision as much as James' connection with the betting. If the association's verdict had not been against him, it is possible that James might have had the management of the new league team of Ipswich Town.

Leading Victoria Players and Fans Approve Elks' Intercity Team Move

A resolution supporting the Victoria Elks Club's move to improve football in this city through the medium of a crack eleven intercity engagements, received the endorsement of close to 50 players and interested soccer followers at an open meeting last night in the Elks Club.

There was not one dissenting voice to this resolution and those attending formed a fairly good cross-section of the local soccer world. All speakers talking on the matter noted that the Elks move would go a long way toward the salvation of this game, which in earlier days enjoyed bumper attendances. Managers of Saturday League first division teams were not present.

Despite the fact the Elks had been refused a franchise in the intercity loop by the B.C. Football Commission, they still had hopes of being granted that permission, it was announced. As yet the organizing committee had not been given the reasons behind refusal of the entry.

"Whatever the outcome," said Percy Payne, one of the organizing committee, "it is definite that the Elks Football Club is going to play lots of football in the city this year." During the course of his address, Payne introduced George Yoxall who has agreed to finance the team.

Following is a summary of the talks of the various interested persons at the meeting:

P. C. Payne: He first sketched the details that led up to the plan and noted that the Elks were not out looking for publicity through this move, but that their only thoughts were toward the improvement of a fast-failing sport. "If anyone can prove to us where football will suffer through our entry, we would be willing to withdraw," he challenged. There would be no officers elected until further details about the club had been arranged. He mentioned the possibility of reviving the old Pacific Northwest League. The Elks would affiliate with the B.C.F.A. if they were refused the franchise again, a move that will enable them to play in all cup competitions.

George Yoxall, sponsor: He pointed out the necessity for real football. At present it was dead for reasons he did not know. "If we can get a good team together there is no reason why we can't get into the Dominion Cup finals and bring the trophy to this city."

C. V. Milton of the organizing committee: Milton pointed out that a few years back a number of Vancouver teams protested against playing a Victoria "rep" team in intercity engagements, and suggested that an intercity club be formed in the Capital City. That couldn't be done on the year suggested, but this year the Elks started working early on the plan, only to have it rejected by the commission. He said that intercity games always paid their way in this city. Continuing, he said that there were a number of better-class players in the city who, owing to their ability, were left to do most of the work in a game. If you asked them if they were improving their game you would get a negative answer. They cannot improve.

Nose Out Bluebirds 12 to 11 in Keenly-fought Intermediate Lacrosse Playoff; Deciding Battle Tuesday

James Bay and the Bluebirds box lacrosse squads were all even today in their campaign for the intermediate city championship title. About 300 excited fans crowded around the floodlighted box in the Athletic Park last night and saw Coach Ted Menzies' Bays nose out last year's champions, 12 to 11, after 80 minutes of fierce fighting.

Bluebirds, managed by Harry Sargison, won the first game, 13 to 8. The final clash will be played Tuesday evening.

With the score deadlocked at 11 to 11 and only five seconds of play left, Ralph Clark, fast-moving forward, snared the rubber sphere, dashed the length of the arena and planted it in the net behind the goalie to give the James Bay crew victory.

Play was quite rough, with both teams indulging in slashing. Bays drew eight penalties and Bluebirds six.

SCORE TIED UP

Sargison's Bluebirds started out well and at the end of the first session were in front, 4 to 1. They managed to retain their lead for the first seven minutes of the next canto, but soon after that the Bays started to hit their stride. Red Mason fired in two quick goals, and a few minutes later Bill Allen bagged the tying marker. Ralph Clark's goal some time later gave the Bays their

WOMEN GOLFERS NAME OFFICERS

Mrs. Ilma South Re-elected Captain At Uplands Club

Women members of the Uplands Golf Club held their annual meeting yesterday afternoon at the clubhouse and elected Mrs. Ilma South captain for the second year. Mrs. F. H. Shore was also returned as secretary.

The committee includes the following: Mrs. E. M. Cuppage, Mrs. H. T. Webb, Mrs. A. C. Lindsay, Mrs. S. D. Horsford and Mrs. C. Percival.

In appreciation of their services as captain and secretary during the year, Mrs. South and Mrs. Shore were presented with bouquets of roses and violets. The committee will send a telegram to Mrs. E. Jackson, who is en route to Ottawa to play for British Columbia in the interprovincial and the Canadian golf championship, wishing her luck.

The September par competition was played yesterday, and Mrs. O. M. Higgins led a class, being all square, and Miss M. Young was the B winner, finishing 2 up.

Local Owner Scores Twice

Lady Goldstream and Miss Goldstream Win for Chiappa

C. Chiappa, the Parson's Bridge horse owner and trainer, had a big day at Willows race track yesterday.

After his Lady Goldstream, the gallant 12-year-old mare by Will Somers had won the opening heat of the program, he saddled Miss Goldstream for the second. Just like her namesake she went to the front at once and won in the clear.

The bettors were heavily in favor of the first winner but shied from Miss Goldstream who has been late coming around to form. The result was she returned $22.55 straight, the longest price of the day.

Frankie Wilbourn rode both of the winners for the local owner. F. Acheson's Wexford Boy put in a bid for the "iron-horse" title of the meeting his second start in two days and his third in a row for the meeting. He defeated a good field of western bred over the mile route in the fourth under fine guidance by Jockey Holliday.

The invitation handicap, feature of the day, went to Mrs. I. D. Hunter's Capt. Larco. Smartly ridden by Johnny Craigmyle he was on top from wire to wire, with Grice second and Sim Teird third. It was Craigmyle's second winner of the day.

Goldstream 11, the Lieutenant Governor's classy mare by Golden Boss, who is finding herself after bearing a foal last year, at last found a field she could beat in the fifth race. With Jockey Spoori in the saddle she took the top from the start and defeated the favored Salinas easily.

CANDID CAMERA FANS HAVE DAY — Candid camera enthusiasts shot to their hearts' content when they were allowed on the field and in the dugouts of Sportsman's Park, St. Louis. A Camera Day was declared, and lens lads and lassies swarmed all over the place, making the noble athletes pose in every possible manner. It was one way of having the Browns photographed and to get someone to come out and see them play. Douglas Rodwald, Robert Fisher, and Jack Halloran, left to right; shoot infelder Roy Hughes, left, and pitcher Ed. Linke from the top of the dugout.

So it can't happen here, eh? So no club could ever do what the Pittsburgh Pirates of 1921 did—kick away a sixgame lead in the closing days of a pennant fight? And no slugging, particularly a right-handed batsman, could come down the September stretch to equal Babe Ruth's 60-homes-a-season record of 1927. The die-hards have been saying it for years, but now they're not so sure that history won't repeat. Pittsburgh 17 years back was the team that was just about "in" with the pennant then, and had the door slammed in their face. And remember the Babe in September, 1927. He waved that big wagon tongue for 17 homers in that 30-day stretch.

There's more than an outside chance that the Pirates of today, particularly after that 12-inning beating they absorbed from Cincinnati's Reds yesterday, will put old-time marks in the record books. That defeat, coupled with the pair of decisions the second-place Chicago Cubs took from the Phillies sliced the Bucs' lead to two games, and, what's more important, left the Pirates facing six games with the Reds and three with the Cubs.

Then there's big Hank Greenberg, who clouted his 55th and 56th homers of the season yesterday, even though Detroit Tigers were handed a double whipping by Cleveland. That pair of pokes put big Hank three games up on the Bam's pace, and left him with nine more starts to reach the mark.

Yesterday's two wallpops marked a total of nine in 12 days for the big fellow, and gave him sole possession of a major league record—that for having hit two homers in a game 10 times this season. Bucky Walters was the big noise in the Cincinnati firing. He held the Bucs to seven hits over the 12 innings, and won his own ball game in the third extra with a run-producing single.

In Philadelphia, Augie Galan's eighth-inning homer gave the Cubs a 3 to 2 decision in the opener, and Rip Collins' two doubles and four runs batted in turned the trick, 7 to 6, in the Unknown Golfers Set Pace After First Round of Westchester Open

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — Having separated the wheat from the chaff in the $13,500 Westchester 108-hole tournament, officials let the chaff play yesterday over the soggy Fenway golf club course and the results were sad. There wasn't a single big name golfer among yesterday's 80 starters in a tourney that has drawn almost all the big names of North American golf. As a result, Fenway's par of 70 never was in danger of cracking.

Co-leaders after the day's firing were Andy Lapola of Florham Park, N.J.; Tony Tiso of Eastchester, N.Y.; and Tony Kosinski, an amateur from Bridgeport, Conn. They shot 72s, two over par, as only 27 players broke 80. Today the pace was to be stepped up, for among the 175-odd scheduled to play are the three United States champions, Ralph Guldahl (open), Willie Turnesa (amateur) and Paul Runyan (P.G.A.). Sam Snead, Canadian open champion and the year's leading money winner, Henry Picard, Ky Laffoon, Harry Cooper, Denny Shute and other top-notchers.

A. Dussault of Quebec City, only Canadian playing yesterday, shot an 80, 10 over par. His score left him in danger of being eliminated when the field is cut to the low 150 and ties after first rounds were completed today.

Defeats Mrs. H. N. Sheffield 3 and 1 in Oak Bay Golf Final

Miss Peggy Bagley is the new women's champion of the Victoria Golf Club. In the 18-hole final played yesterday afternoon she defeated Mrs. H. N. Sheffield, 3 and 1. Miss Bagley succeeds Mrs. B. R. Philbrick as club titleholder. In the final of the first flight Mrs. R. C. Field turned back Mrs. J. H. Wilson, 2 up, while the second flight went to Mrs. E. D. Todd as a result of her 5 and 4 win over Mrs. A. Scott. Mrs. E. F. Nickson won fourth flight honors from Miss V. Shandley, 2 up.

At the conclusion of the matches the prizes were presented in the clubhouse by Mrs. Walter Parry.

Adanacs Take Series Lead

New Westminster Box Lacrosse Squad Beats Nelson in First of B.C. Series

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP)—New Westminster's Adanacs, champions of the Intercity Box Lacrosse League, drove to a 22 to 12 victory over Nelson Maple Leafs last night in the first game of the best-of-three British Columbia senior box lacrosse series.

The second game will be played Monday. The series winner will represent the province in the 1938 fight for the Mann Cup, held last year by New Westminster Salmonbellies.

The interior representatives were fast and tricky but slow to get going. Adanacs outscored the Leafs 7 to 0 in the opening period but Nelson came back with six goals in the second quarter. The half-time score was 10 to 6 for Adanacs.

A seven-goal rally in the third quarter put the New Westminster squad ahead by a safe margin and they put down a belated last-quarter drive by the Leafs to protect their lead. Pat Egan led the Nelson scorers with four goals and "Jock" Walmsley had three. Ted Bradbury sparked the Adanac victory with four goals and two assists and Bert Robinson had three goals for the New Westminster team.

Women vs. Men

Women and men members of the Colwood Golf Club will meet tomorrow in their annual handicap competition for the Schwenck Cup. Players wishing to take part are asked to get in touch with secretary Mickey Richardson.

NEW YORK (CP)—A hundred and one things might cross a fellow's mind as he wheels a bike around Madison Square Garden for six days, but it seems a little country spot on Vancouver Island is uppermost in the thoughts of William (Torchy) Peden.

From this it may be taken that some 10 years of pedal-pushing are just about enough for the big red-headed "holier guy" from Victoria who rode second in the Garden six-day grind this morning along with his brother Doug.

"Another winter of riding and I might decide the money in bike riding isn't worth it," said Torchy. "After all, has anybody heard of a better place than a country spot near Victoria?" Nobody around his trackside bunk had. But of course many things might happen to change Torchy's mind between now and the end of the winter season. His downright love of bike riding alone might be sufficient. It was a different story he told last March. Then, during one of his rests and while Doug carried on the six-day merry-go-round,

Torchy said "retire is one word we don't know." And now Torchy wants to settle down. DOUG SKEPTICAL Torchy figured Doug—hey, call him "Tiny"—on the bike track—should keep the Peden name in the six-day riding business "for another eight or 10 years." Before long Tiny should have learned about all he can from his 32-year-old brother, now rated one of bike riding's all time greats. Doug, however, took the retirement ideas of his brother none too seriously. The current grind is about Torchy's 100th race. He's been in so many he is none too sure of the number, and has cycled the equivalent of more than seven times around the globe in competition. During the summer he rides with the amateurs "just for the fun of it."

It's always been that way with the giant red-head—bike riding is fun. So perhaps Doug is right and Torchy's idea of becoming a country squire shouldn't be taken too seriously as long as they make bicycles.

H. R. Haines New Basketball Head

DUNCAN—The annual general meeting of the Cowichan Basketball League was held in the Agricultural Hall, Duncan, on Thursday evening, with G. E. Bonner, Cobble Hill, president, in the chair. He reported registrations last year of 120 players in the league, and prospects promise better for this year's season which will commence on October 14. Officers elected for the coming year follow: President, H. R. Haines; vice-president, Roy Jack; secretary-treasurer, Norman Martin.

Budge-Mako Seek Honors

Doubles Partners Battle Today for U.S. Singles Tennis Title

FOREST HILLS, N.Y.—Donald Budge and Gene Mako, boon companions and doubles partners since they toothed on tennis racquets out in California, qualified yesterday to play each other today in the final of the United States men's tennis championship.

Two weeks ago, when the tournament began, you probably could have got odds of 100 to 1 against Mako's reaching the final.

Yet in overwhelming Jack Bromwich of Australia before a cheering section of 15,000 in the stadium by scores of 6,3,7,5,6,4, yesterday the big fellow looked like a great tennis player.

Budge, the defending champion, was equally impressive as he came along a few minutes later and splattered Sidney Wood Jr., 6,3,6,3,6,3, in the other semi-final. But Budge was supposed to do it; Mako wasn't.

WOMEN'S PLAY

Alice Marble of Los Angeles nosed out Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan of Jamaica Plain, Mass., in a women's weird semifinal, 5,7,7,5,7,5. The two girls took turns going to pieces in the treacherous wind currents that swirled about the court. In today's final Miss Marble, champion two years ago, tackled Nancy Wynne, free-hitting Australian girl.

GEORGIE PACE DEFEATS YACK

Canadian Bantamweight Champ Drops Decision to Negro

TORONTO — Georgie Pace, Cleveland negro, won a 10-round decision over Toronto's Baby Yack, Canadian bantamweight champion, in the main bout of a boxing card here last night. Pace, ranked No. 2 in the world's list of bantams, weighed 119 pounds; Yack 118½.

The Cleveland boxer earned the right to meet Sixto Escobar, world's bantam champion, in a title match.

Tommy Bland, leading contender for the Canadian welterweight title, knocked out Jack Stanley, New York, in 40 seconds of the first round in a semi-windup. Bland weighed 148½; Stanley, 144½.

Torchy May Retire

Peden Toying With Idea of Quitting Bike Game at Close of Winter Season and Settling Here

NEW YORK (CP)—A hundred and one things might cross a fellow's mind as he wheels a bike around Madison Square Garden for six days, but it seems a little country spot on Vancouver Island is uppermost in the thoughts of William (Torchy) Peden.

From this it may be taken that some 10 years of pedal-pushing are just about enough for the big red-headed "holier guy" from Victoria who rode second in the Garden six-day grind this morning along with his brother Doug. "Another winter of riding and I might decide the money in bike riding isn't worth it," said Torchy. "After all, has anybody heard of a better place than a country spot near Victoria?" Nobody around his trackside bunk had. But of course many things might happen to change Torchy's mind between now and the end of the winter season. His downright love of bike riding alone might be sufficient. It was a different story he told last March. Then, during one of his rests and while Doug carried on the six-day merry-go-round,

Torchy said "retire is one word we don't know." And now Torchy wants to settle down. DOUG SKEPTICAL Torchy figured Doug—hey, call him "Tiny"—on the bike track—should keep the Peden name in the six-day riding business "for another eight or 10 years." Before long Tiny should have learned about all he can from his 32-year-old brother, now rated one of bike riding's all time greats. Doug, however, took the retirement ideas of his brother none too seriously. The current grind is about Torchy's 100th race. He's been in so many he is none too sure of the number, and has cycled the equivalent of more than seven times around the globe in competition. During the summer he rides with the amateurs "just for the fun of it."

It's always been that way with the giant red-head—bike riding is fun. So perhaps Doug is right and Torchy's idea of becoming a country squire shouldn't be taken too seriously as long as they make bicycles.

In Deadlock With Derby For First

Huddersfield Surprises in English League With 3 to 0 Victory

LONDON (CP)—Defeated 3 to 0 at Huddersfield today, Everton lost its first game in seven starts in the English Football League. The loss puts the toffee-makers in a first place tie with Derby County, victor 5 to 0 over Stoke City, but the former has a game in hand.

It was the first time this season that Everton had failed to score. The victory was a welcome one for the Yorkshiremen, who moved away from the bottom of the standings as a result.

Liverpool jumped into third place with 12 points, two behind the leaders, through a 3 to 0 triumph over the strong Leeds United team. Aston Villa and Arsenal met at Villa Park but the famous clubs fought a scoreless draw.

Chelsea lost valuable ground by losing 5 to 1 to Manchester United at Old Trafford and Bolton Wanderers drew 0 to 0 at Leicester.

By drawing 3 to 3 with Manchester City, Blackburn Rovers held their lead in the second division, but the margin was cut to one point as Fulham, before a home crowd, trounced Bradford 4 to 0.

In the third division's southern section, Aldershot's place at the top was taken by Swindon Town and Northampton Town. The Wiltshiremen made it 3 to 0 against Watford while Northampton downed Notts County 2 to 1. Aldershot lost by the only goal of the game at Newport.

Crews Alexandra joined Barnsley on the top rung of the northern circuit ladder. The railwaymen smashed Lincoln City 6 to 0 to bring their point total to 12, Chester subduing Barnsley 2 to 1 in a home game.

SCOTTISH LEAGUE

GLASGOW (CP Cable)—Queen of South stretched its lead in Scottish Football League today to two points by defeating Partick Thistle 2 to 1 here. The "old firm" of Celtic and Rangers share the second spot. The Celts whipped Raith Rovers 6 to 1 and Arbroath held the light blues to a 3 to 3 draw.

The pace-setting Dumfries eleven now has 15 points, two more than the famous Glasgow teams and three more than Aberdeen and Clyde. The Dons lost a 5 to 0 decision to Hibernians at Easter Road, Edinburgh and Clyde went under 3 to 2 at St. Johnstone.

Hamilton Academicals failed to maintain their improved form, losing 4 to 0 at Falkirk and are now bracketed with Partick in sixth position.

A home 3 to 1 victory over Heart of Midlothian lifted Ayr United out of last place now occupied by Raith Rovers, newcomers to the major league. Third Lanark and St. Mirren also are in the danger zone, playing drawn games. The Cathkin Park outfit drew 3 to 3 with the visiting Kilmarnock squad and the Saints, also at home, divided two goals with Albion Rovers.

In the other first division match Motherwell blanked Queen's Park 2 to 0 at Fir Park. "Dundee ran riot against Forfar Athletic in a junior league encounter, winning 10 to 2. Cowdenbeat retained the top berth by virtue of a 3 to 1 victory over Morton.

Frenchman Talks Totems, Not War

Kurt Seligmann of Paris Thrilled With Totem Pole Purchase

A modern artist from France, Kurt Seligmann of Paris, came to Victoria today and was much more interested in talking about the Indian totem pole he purchased at Hazelton than in the present grave crisis in Europe.

At the Empress Hotel, where he is staying with Mrs. Seligmann, he dismissed the European situation in a few words.

"I don't like it," he said, "but somehow I don't think there will be war."

Mr. and Mrs. Seligmann are on their first visit to North America. When they reached Vancouver they took a ship for Alaska and became so fascinated with the totem poles they saw in the coast villages that they determined to go inland to study more of the ancient Indian art of wood carving.

From Prince Rupert they went to Hazelton and found so much to see that they remained five weeks, talking to Indians and studying legend and history.

Highlight of their visit was the purchase of a 50-foot, one and a half ton totem pole, which they will place in the Trocadero Museum in Paris. It stood in the bottom of the Bulkley Canyon, and had to be cut in two pieces for shipment. Twenty-five Indians, singing their native songs, packed the totem from the bottom of the canyon while Mr. and Mrs. Seligmann and half the countryside looked on.

"You live in such an interesting country," Mr. Seligmann said of Canada. "It is so new, so fresh. Everything in Europe has been so stamped down by generations. But here it is so different."

VICTORIA YOUTHS TOURING FRANCE

"Most people come to France, stay in big hotels, and never really see the country. We're getting a look at everything, though," reads a letter from George and Bill Cameron, two Victoria youths, who are touring France on a motorcycle.

George is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Cameron, 1085 Moss Street, and Bill, the son of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Cameron, 1802 Belmont venue. The two left Victoria two months ago and took a freighter from Vancouver to London. In London, the two met George's parents who made the trip from New York. The party then toured England by car visiting the Glasgow Exhibition, in addition to many other points of interest.

After the trip through England, the two boys bought a motorcycle with side car, and started off on a tour of France. After seeing as much of France as they want, the two will journey to Rome. From Italy they plan to return to London.

The letter was received by Cedric Lefevre of Victoria.

Peace Rally in City Arranged

A public rally in the interests of world peace by collective security was called by the Democratic Book Club of Victoria today for tomorrow night at 8.15, in the Chamber of Commerce auditorium.

Speakers announced for the meeting are M. J. Coldwell, M.P. for Rosetown-Biggan, national leader of the C.C.F.; Alan Chambers, Victoria; Rev. Bryce Wallace, Victoria; Nigel Morgan, and a representative of the League of Nations Society.

The annual meeting of Ward Four, Saanich Liberal Association, will be held at Marigold Hall next Thursday evening at 8.

TOWN TOPICS

One case of mumps was the only reportable disease registered by the city health department for the week.

The Victoria Choral and Orchestral Union will hold orchestra rehearsals on Monday evening at 7.30 in the Memorial Hall. New players, especially in the string sections, will be welcome.

Theft of a medical case containing six phials of drugs was reported to the city police last night by Dr. J. M. Fowler. The case was removed from his car.

A workout of the Saanich Thistles Football Club will be held tomorrow morning at 10.30 at Hampton Road Park. All members of the team are asked to turn out.

Ward 7 Saanich Liberal Association will hold its annual meeting at Hampton Hall on Monday evening at 8. The speaker will be N. W. Whittaker, M.P.P., and Alan Chambers.

A counterfeit Canadian 50 cent piece was turned in to the city police yesterday. Police warned there may be more circulating in the city and merchants should watch for them.

St. Mary's Men's Guild held its first meeting of the fall season on Thursday last, when arrangements were made to hold the annual banquet on Thursday, October 13. Following the business session each member gave an account of his travels during the holiday season.

Charles Stewart, national president of the Young Communist League of Canada, will speak at a public meeting on Monday evening at 8 at 724 Fort Street. He will deal with conditions in Britain, France and the Soviet Union. Problems of young people in Canada will also be discussed.

A meeting of the city's finance committee at 2.15 on Monday will afford members of the library board an opportunity to present their case for the purchase of a strip of land north of the library building. A recommendation on the matter is expected to go to the City Council at its meeting Monday evening at 8.

The Victoria Kipling Society will start their winter session of monthly meetings on Wednesday evening at 8. Meetings will be held over the Royal Bank of Canada, Fort and Cook Streets. After a short business session the president, A. S. G. Cornwell, will give a paper on the story "The Tree of Justice" from Kipling's "Rewards and Fairies." Miss B. M. Carlisle will read the poems in connection with the stories. All interested in Kipling's writings will be heartily welcome.

Vancouver Island Rock and Alpine Garden Society will resume its monthly meeting at the Oak Bay Beach Hotel on Monday at 8. At this meeting the members will have the opportunity of inspecting the deliascope which has just been acquired by the society through the generosity of Miss Lucy Angus. Lionel Taylor will address the meeting and show a number of colored photographs of gardens taken during his recent tour through the United States. All who are interested in rock gardening and contemplate joining the society are invited to attend the meeting.

R. Myers, Dominion secretary of the Amputation's Association of the Great War, and Col. E. A. Baker, national president of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, both of whom are members of the Dominion Council of the Amputation's Association of the Great War, will be in Victoria Monday, and will attend a dinner to be given in their honor by the local branch at the Hudson's Bay Company's store, at 7. It is expected that amputation members and their wives will attend, along with the blind ex-servicemen and their wives. Mr. Baker and Mr. Myers will address the meeting on matters relating to disabled ex-servicemen and their relationship to the present conditions throughout the Dominion.

WOMEN'S CLASSES START AT Y.M.C.A.

Toning-up and slimming-down classes for middle-aged women will get under way at the Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday afternoon, October 4, at 2.30. The class is part of the Y.M.C.A. fall and winter physical training curriculum and will be held every Tuesday and Friday afternoons at the same time.

Miss Sheila Swift, popular women's instructor, will conduct the classes. Swedish and Danish exercises will be specialized and a play period will follow each class. Volley ball will also be taught.

Those wishing to take part may register at the local "Y" office or phone Empire 8811.

Pedens Hold Fourth Place

NEW YORK—The Italian team of Georgetti and Moretti led the 10 pairs of pedallers in New York's six-day bike race today. Even with the Italians in terms of miles and laps were Olmo and Reboli and De Bacco and Saavedra. They had covered 2,316 miles. Each had eight laps. The Victoria, B.C., team of Torchy and Doug Peden was one lap behind.

SELECT JURORS NEXT WEDNESDAY

Preparations for the fall assizes, scheduled to open here on October 11 at 11 in the Court House, will be advanced another step next week as balloting on the jury for four cases is conducted on Wednesday.

Each year the names of 200 citizens are listed for jury duty. They are required to possess certain qualifications and are selected in a manner calculated to give the jury a representative cross-section of the people.

Prior to the opening of the assizes, ballots are taken on the names and from 24 to 48 are selected to appear in court. From their numbers are chosen the jury list.

It was believed the maximum of 48 would be voted for the coming assizes, since the list includes a capital charge.

Four cases are listed. They include one of murder, one of manslaughter, one under the narcotic drugs act, involving four counts, and one of retaining stolen property.

FUNERAL NOTICE

The members of Pro Patria Branch
Canadian Legion and the Women's Auxiliary are requested to attend the funeral of our late comrade Charles Tennant, at St. John's Church, Quadra Street, on Monday, September 26, at 10.30 a.m.

C. A. GILL, Secretary.

photo of Czech soldiers wheeling a field-piece into position were enacted today in Czecho-

COLUMBIA THEATRE
The purple Panamint range of Southern California, forming the western rim of Death Valley, is as little known to tourists as the valley is celebrated.

With this fascinating country as its natural background, "Panamint's Bad Man" offers new thrills in outdoor action. Smith Ballew stars in the principal production, now at the Columbia
Theatre, with Evelyn Daw, Noah Beery Sr., and Stanley Fields in the cast.

Henry Fonda in Stirring Role

Many years of tenacious and often disappointing struggle preceded the success of Warner Janssen, noted musician, conductor and composer, who has written an original symphonic score for Walter Wanger's
"Blockade," in which Madeleine Carroll and Henry Fonda will be starred at the Atlas Theatre on Monday.

As a boy Janssen haunted Carnegie Hall in New York, returning home to conduct phantom symphony orchestras in his bedroom. . . . He learned to play the piano and violin and at 14 gave music lesson to earn pocket money.

DOMINION THEATRE
The fact that Bobby Breen has a personality and an inherent boyish vitality as important as his exceptionally fine singing-voice is abundantly evidenced in "Breaking the Ice," the 11-year-old singing star's newest musical romance now showing at the Dominion Theatre.

This does not mean that Bobby's fine singing has been submerged in this most elaborate and costly of his vehicles to date, but rather that the producers of the picture have taken full advantage of the lad's genuine talent as an entertainer.

CAPITOL THEATRE
In their search for a colorful ballet to climax the skating numbers in her current 20th Century-Fox picture, "My Lucky Star," now showing at the Capitol Theatre, Sonja Henie and her dance director, Harry Losee, turned happily to one of the most beloved story-book classics of all time—Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland."

All of Carroll's fantastic creatures have come to life—and all on skates. Sonja skims across the ice in the company of Tweedle-deed and Tweedledum and the Walrus and the Carpenter.

PLAZA THEATRE
Charles Boyer, star of Walter Wanger's romantic melodrama,
"Algiers," in which he appears opposite Sigrid Gurie and Hedy Lamarr at the Plaza Theatre was about to leave Hollywood, discouraged, when signed to long-term contract by Wanger four years ago. . . . later appeared in "Private Worlds," "History Is Made at Night" and other successes. . . . became established in the minds of theatre-goers as an actor of unusual attainments. . . .
was born in the town of Figeac, France.

OAK BAY THEATRE
Hollywood made "Four Men and a Prayer."

And the transition of this popular story, read by millions in book form or magazine serial, is now showing at the Oak Bay Theatre.

Of primary interest, comes the report that the film has not deviated from the original plot.

Production has passed up all the ultra-saccharine cliches of the love motif for the nobles of heman instincts—the unswerving faith of four sons in their father's honor.

In Aid of Jews
A non-Aryan Christian relief organization in London, England, reports through a Victoria representative, Miss Caroline Macklem, 1040 Linden Avenue, that the treatment of Jews in Germany has become unbelievable, and that funds to aid these persecuted people are urgently needed.

A letter from the secretary of the society, C. H. Gill, says: "The Jews are indeed suffering. Only recently I have received many private letters from Germany saying that things are going from bad to worse, and that the Nazi treatment of the Jews is absolutely diabolical in its cold-blooded thoroughness."

Any donations on their behalf will be forwarded by Miss Macklem.

QUADRA STUDENTS RECEIVE AWARDS

Prizes and certificates won by students of Quadra School were presented at commencement exercises in the auditorium yesterday as the complete graduating class of last June returned to receive honors.

Following introductory remarks by Principal G. H. E. Green, Miss H. A. Bradshaw and J. T. Bruce presented Quadra badges to captains of house sports, teams and Mr. Bruce awarded the Youth Empire shooting prizes to W. Bryson, D. Jones and B. Hill and last certificates to 17 pupils of the school.

P. E. George, chairman of the school board, presented entrance certificates to those students who were successful in their final examinations last year, prior to a musical interlude during which the school choir sang "Music Makers" and "On Wings of Song."

Mrs. F. F. Beckett, educational secretary of the I.O.E., addressed the assembly briefly on the objectives of the order here and Trustee Mrs. A. S. Christie congratulated the students on their scholastic standing.

Donald Holmes, graduate last year, gave the valedictory speech which preceded tea served by officials of the school's Parent-Teacher Association.

During his opening remarks, Mr. Green mentioned the school had been successful in retaining the Strathcona trust prize for physical training for the fourth successive year.

CLUB SPEAKERS

One of the most interesting phases of medical research will be discussed by Dr. George Hall when he addresses fellow members of the Rotary Club at their luncheon next Thursday on "Cancer." The luncheon will be held in the Empress Hotel.

V. L. Denton, principal of the Normal School, will speak on "The Larger Unit in School Administration" at the Kiwanis luncheon in the Empress Hotel. The Gyro Club guest for its weekly luncheon in the Empress Hotel on Monday will be O. Kendall, Victoria radio technician, whose subject will be "Facts About Radio of Interest to the Layman."

The Business and Professional Women's Club will hold a business meeting on Monday evening at 8 in the Union Building club-rooms. Plans for the club's winter season will be discussed.

MONTREAL—Spot, Copper, electrolytic, 12.50; Tin, 45.00; Lead, 4.45; Zinc, 4.40; Antimony, 15.00 per 100 pounds f.o.b. Montreal, five ton lots.

Canada Near Top For Safe Driving

TORONTO — Canadians are among the world's safest drivers. For every 10,000 vehicles on the highway there are fewer accidents and fewer fatalities in Canada than anywhere else in the world except New Zealand, according to the records of the National Safety Council.

"It's something to be proud of," said W. G. Robertson, general manager of the Ontario Motor League. "But there is still room for improvement."

New Zealand, with only 7.5 deaths per 10,000 vehicles, is still far ahead of Canada, with a rate of 10.5. But vast countries with long highway systems seem to boost the death rate, for Australia, neighbor of New Zealand, has a rate of 16.8 deaths per 10,000 vehicles, half again as high as Canada.

Canada nowhere approaches the black record of every European nation. Italy is the worst country in the world for motor fatalities; its rate of 61.4 is six times that of Canada's.

England has the safest record in Europe, but it is more than double that of Canada's—24.6 deaths per 10,000 vehicles. In Scotland the death rate soars to 34.8. Germany, with perhaps the most modern highways in the world, has a still higher death rate of 42.4. The Netherlands shoots up to 51.1.

And the United States, where 40,000 persons were killed in traffic accidents last year, has one of the lowest rates of any country—13.0 deaths per 10,000 vehicles. The reason for that paradox, explained Mr. Robertson, is that the United States has three-fourths of the world's automobiles—28,000,000, as compared with 2,000,000 in England—and 40,000,000 fatalities in a single year still gives a relatively low death rate when compared with most other countries.

"But let's not put ourselves on the back too much over these figures," Mr. Robertson cautioned. "Our death rate is low, to be sure, but we ought to get it down to that of New Zealand. There is no reason why Canada can't be the safest country in the world."

NEW YORK—Copper steady, electrolytic spot, 10.37 1/2; export, 10.25 to 10.28; Tin, steady, spot and nearby, 43.25; for ward, 42.50; Lead steady, spot, New York, 5.10 to 5.12; East St. Louis, 4.85; Zinc, spot steady, East St. Louis, spot and forward, 4.45.

Leaf cutting ants often strip the foliage from citrus trees in a night—not because they eat the leaves, but they use the clipped pieces to line nests.

Wheat

WINNIPEG (CP)—Winnipeg wheat futures opened five cents higher today but fell back on profit-taking when traders believed European tension had eased somewhat. At the final bell prices were 1 1/2 to 1 3/4 cents higher, October 65 1/2, November 63 1/2, December 64 1/2 and May 68 1/2 to 68 3/4.

Continued good Canadian wheat and flour exports, estimated at 750,000 bushels, higher outside markets, and hovering war clouds in Europe brought out broad and large volumes of business. Late news on the European crisis that a peaceful solution may yet be found to meet Czechoslovakia's minority troubles caused price reactions in all North American wheat markets.

Earlier October, December and May wheat touched the five-cent allowable limit.

Liverpool skyrocketed to close 6 1/4 to 7d higher. Buenos Aires moved up more than four cents but reacted to close 1 1/4 to 2 1/2 higher. United States markets were up four or more at the day's top levels. U.S. wheat export trade was estimated at 2,250,000 bushels.

Offerings for Nos. 1, 3 and 4 northern grades were light. A moderate No. 2 northern turnover was reported in the cash market with prices firm.

Coarse grains advanced more than two but eased from the top points in the final minutes.

FIRST

Rev. Hugh A. McLeod will preach at both services in First United Church tomorrow. The subjects morning and evening will be, respectively, "When the Morning Wakens" and "An Aggressive Faith."

Music for the day follows: morning, solo, "The Twenty-third Psalm" (Malotte), Mrs. F. G. Carver; anthem, "Blessed Is the Nation" (Sir F. Bridge), soloist, Mrs. W. H. Wilson; evening, solo, "Sweet Is Thy Mercy" (Barnby), soloist, Mrs. Chas. Goodwin; anthem, "O God Our Help" (Martin).

FAIRFIELD

Harvest Thanksgiving will be observed at the Fairfield United Church tomorrow with special musical services, and special church decorations for the occasion. The entire front of the church auditorium will present a display of fruit crops, garden produce, flowers, preserves and confections. This phase of the work is being arranged by A. C. Charlton and a committee of church members.

Rev. N. J. Crees will deliver an address at the morning service suitable to the occasion, and will tell a story to the children of Harvest Thanksgiving significance. His address will be, "The Message of Harvest," while the children's story will be, "Teach the Stones." The choir, under the direction of Miss Isabelle Pike, will sing "O Lord How Manifold" (Barnby) and "The Lord Is Loving Unto Every Man" (Garrett), Gilbert Margison will be soloist. He will sing "We Thank Thee" (Fitzgerald).

In the evening the entire service will be of a musical character, comprising choral, quartet and solo numbers, with the congregation joining in harvest festival music.

The choir will sing a group of five numbers as follows: "I Will Magnify Thee, O Lord" (Gross), "O Taste and See" (Goss), "While the Earth Remaineth" (Mauder), "The God of Abraham Praise" (Watts) and "Te Deum" (Jackson).

Miss Connie Barlow, soprano, will sing "Thanks Be to God" (Stanley Dickson), and W. J. Cobbett, bass, will render Allister's "The Lord Is My Light."

A mixed quartet, comprising Mr. and Mrs. Percy C. Richards, Miss Muriel Richards and C. E. J. Millins, will sing Bach's "For the Beauty of the Earth" and Krenner's "Prayer of Thanksgiving."

WILKINSON ROAD

Wilkinson Road United Sunday school and adult Bible classes for men and women will meet tomorrow at 10 under the superintendence of N. McGilivray. Promotion Day will be observed and the new classes will be organized for the fall and winter studies. Public worship will commence at 11.15, and Rev. W. Allan will minister.

The young people's society will meet on Monday evening in the church hall at 8, under the presidency of Miss Alvaretta McNutt. Arrangements for the fall and winter activities will be made.

In the evening Rev. James Hyde will exchange with Rev. T. McAllister of Erskine Presbyterian Church.

KNOX

At Knox Presbyterian Church tomorrow instead of the usual Sunday school hour the children will meet with the congregation at 11 for a union Sunday school rally. Rev. J. Mackie Niven will deliver an address appropriate to the occasion. The congregation will also meet for evening service at 7.30.

British-Israel

MIDDLETON GUILD

"Hitler, Undisputed Master of Europe" will be the topic of the address to be given by E. E. Richards under the auspices of the British-Israel World Federation on Monday at 8 in the Campbell Building.

Mr. Richards will discuss the new European situation as it affects Britain, and the approaching chaos in international affairs consequent upon the disaster of the Hitler ultimatum.

Reference will be made to the solemn warning of the late Marquis of Salisbury to the British people concerning the German power in 1900. The position of Europe as the result of the Chamberlain diplomacy, and the ruthless demands which may be expected will be made on Britain, will also be discussed.

B.I. ASSOCIATION

The Victoria and District British-Israel Association will hold its usual public meeting in the Y.M.C.A. hall on Monday evening.

There will be a service of prayer, praise and thanksgiving. Prayer will be offered for those who have to guide the nation through the momentous times through which the world is passing, and it is hoped everyone will attend. Visitors are invited.

On Tuesday night at the Margold branch meeting in the C.C.F. Hall, Carey Road, at 8, the speaker will be Mrs. Brake.

Christian Science

FIRST

"Reality" will be the subject of the lesson-sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow. The golden text will be "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre" (Psalms 45:6).

Among the citations which will comprise the lesson-sermon will be the following from the Bible: "But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it" (Micah 4:1).

The lesson-sermon will also include the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "All reality is in God and His creation, harmonious and eternal. That which He creates is good, and He makes all that is made. Therefore the only reality of sin, sickness, or death is the awful fact that unrealities seem real to human, erring belief, until God strips off their disguise."

Other Denominations

EMPIRE MINISTRY

Guest Sunday will be observed at the Crystal Garden Auditorium tomorrow night when Rev. S. R. Orr will lecture on "Has Britain Blundered Again? Is the so-called betrayal a sell out by the British barons?" He will answer the following questions, "Is the price of peace 30 pieces of silver and a thieves' bargain? Was this surrender to Hitler agreed upon when the Czech Nazi leader was in London last May? Is it coincidence that all but one of Hitler's demands to Lord Halifax in November have been met? Has it been secretly agreed for months to strengthen Hitler and is the Czech humiliation, another victory for the British Nazi set? Or is prophecy being fulfilled in the divine program of the judgment of the nations? Is Britain, Israel in humiliation today, Israel marching to the plan of the ages? When will civilization take its last stand?"

MISSIONARY ALLIANCE

"Seven New Things" will be the subject of Rev. N. Strain's sermon at the Christian and Missionary Alliance Gospel Tabernacle tomorrow evening. In his subject the pastor will deal with the seven following questions: Does Bible prophecy ever relate to the material universe, and if so what changes are predicted? What verse in Isaiah clearly shows that God did not create the world as we find it in Genesis 1 and 2? What is peculiar in the Bible teaching about heaven, not found in other religions? Distinguish between heaven and the heavenly and also kingdom of heaven? What is meant by the first resurrection? When does it occur? Who are included in this resurrection? Who are excluded? Who are the new nations spoken of in Revelation 21?

"The Crowned Life," a message on practical Christianity, will be the subject of the sermon at the morning service. Sunday school will meet at 2.45.

A lecture on the "Tabernacle in the Wilderness," with the aid of a chart, will be given at the young people's meeting on Thursday at 8.

FIRST

Rev. James Strachan, at First Baptist Church tomorrow morning, will preach on "By Dead Reckoning." In the evening his sermon subject will be "The Way, the Truth, the Life."

Morning soloist will be Miss Elfreda Jones, who will sing "I Come to Thee" (Caro Roma), and the choir will be heard in Smart's anthem, "The Lord Is My Shepherd." At the evening service the soloist will be Stanley Honeychurch, singing "The Psalm of Thanksgiving" (Allister), and the choir will be heard in the anthem, "Come, Holy Ghost" (Palestina).

Sunday school and Bible classes will meet at 10. On Wednesday evening at 8 the regular prayer service will be held, and the choir will meet for practice on Thursday at 8.

CENTRAL

"The World's Black Outlook—The Believer's Glorious Uplook: International Dilemma and the Calm in the Crisis" will be the special and timely subject at the Central Baptist Church tomorrow evening, when the pastor, Dr. J. B. Rowell, will preach. All young people are urged to rally for the song service at 7.15.

The morning subject will be a continuation of the theme of last Lord's Day, entitled "Permitted Evil? Yes! But God! How Can We Have Peace in Our Stormy Circumstances?"

EMMANUEL

Special rally day services will be held at the Emmanuel Baptist Church tomorrow. At the morning service Dr. Andrew S. Imrie will preach on "A New Adventure."

At the evening service Dr. Imrie will base his sermon on the subject, "The Iron Did Swim," taken from II Kings 6:6.

The special Sunday school rally service will be held in the afternoon at 2.45 to which parents and friends are invited. Superintendent Don Smith will be assisted by Dr. Imrie and others, and Rev. F. R. G. Dredge of Oak Bay United Church will be the guest speaker. The primary department under Mrs. G. H. E. Green will also give special items. The dedication of the new Sunday school hymnal presented by the boys' class under the leadership of E. G. Marriott will take place and musical numbers will be contributed by the choir and Misses Eva Stewart, Crystal and Margaret Lorber.

Special meetings for the week will include the B.Y.P.U. on Tuesday evening at 8, the midweek service for prayer and testimony on Wednesday evening at 8 and men's prayer circle on Saturday evening at 7.30.

Dollar Line to Operate Ships

Twelve Vessels to Be Rehabilitated for World Services

WASHINGTON (AP)—Maritime Commission officials said today they would make an early announcement of plans for rehabilitation of the 12 vessels of the Dollar Steamship Lines Inc. of San Francisco.

The commission and Dollar interests signed an agreement August 19 under which the commission will acquire about 90 per cent of the company's voting stock.

"Operations will remain in the hands of the company," a commission spokesman said. "It is not contemplated at this time to make an agreement with any other company for the operation of the Dollar Company."

The Matson Steamship Company, informed persons said, had sought to operate the Dollar fleet for the Maritime Commission, and other steamship lines had expressed interest. Officials said, however, the commission would accept none of these proposals.

The agreement between the commission and the Dollar company calls for a five-year operating differential subsidy of about $3,000,000 annually; granting of a $1,500,000 loan by the commission for repairing and rehabilitation, and a $2,000,000 loan by the Reconstruction Corporation to provide working capital.

SEATTLE'S PLANS
SEATTLE—United States Maritime Commission will not be able to supply the ships needed for the shipping route between Seattle and the Orient for "at least another couple of months," Chairman Emory S. Land of the commission, has notified P. H. Harris, president of the Pacific Oriental Line, Inc.

The company was formed several months ago to operate ships, furnished by the Maritime Commission, between Puget Sound and the Far East, and it was thought service would be started by fall.

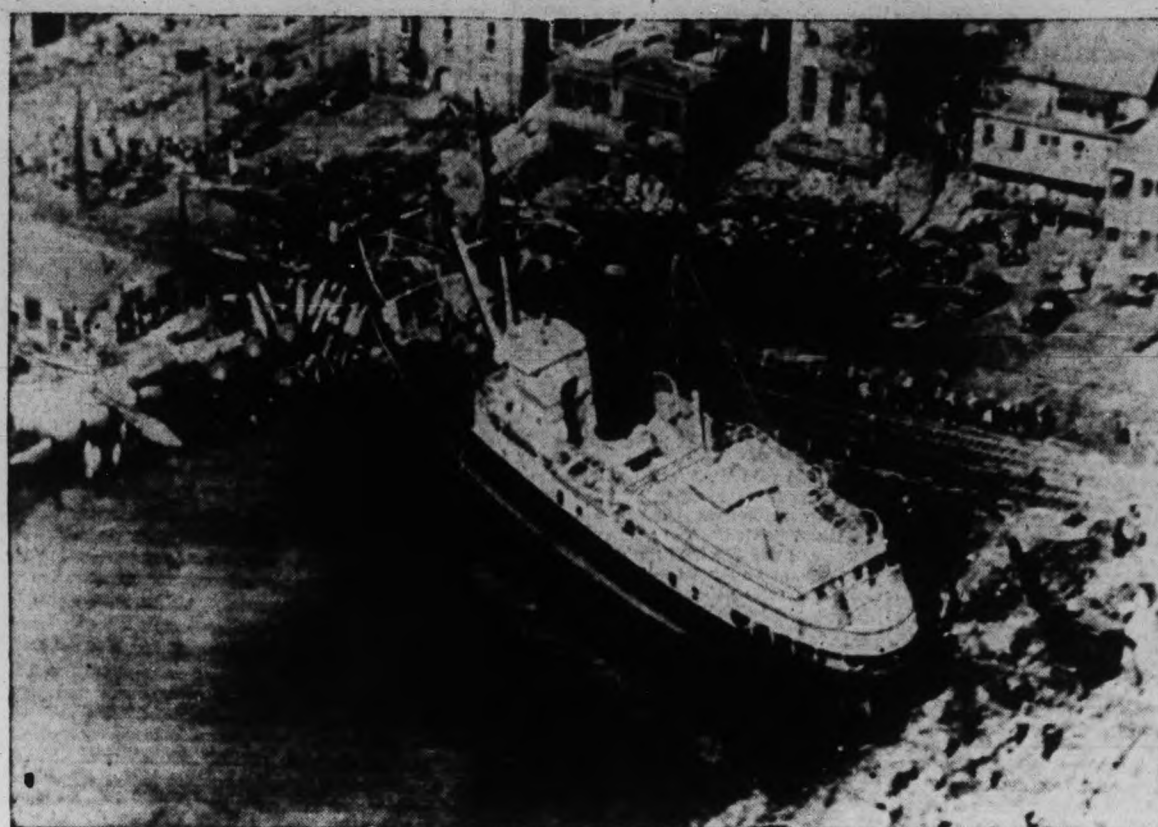

FOLLOWED SHIP'S SYREN SEAWARDS

ASTORIA, Ore. (AP)—Alfred Berthelson, a salmon fisherman caught in the fog, followed a whistle he thought emanated from the lights.

The whistle moved and Berthelson moved after it. When the fog lifted he discovered he had chased a freighter far out into the Pacific. Forty-eight hours later, gasoline and food exhausted, he was taken in tow by a tuna clipper.

Lumber Exports

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP)—A total of 100,001,960 board feet of lumber was dispatched from the Columbia River district during August, the figure exceeding British Columbia's total for the first time in more than a year. The Canadian province shipped 84,808,296 feet, Puget Sound shipped 72,839,063; Oregon coastal points 31,886,334; Washington coastal points 10,862,361.

HERE'S A SAMPLE OF GALE'S WORK—Piers and piling crumbled like matchwood when this steamer, tossed by wind and water, crashed into the docks at New London, Conn. Scenes comparable to this were common all along the Connecticut coastline after the record hurricane smashed its way across northeast states, leaving death and ruin behind.

AROUND THE DOCKS

LUMBER FLEET COMING

Quite a fleet of lumber carriers are listed for loading at Victoria during the balance of the month and the early part of October.

Ss. Sinnington Court, expected here over the week-end to stow lumber for the United Kingdom, is now looked for at the Canadian National docks on Monday. Ss. Templeyard will be alongside on Tuesday.

Ss. Northleigh and Ms. Stensby are on the board for this month, and Ss. King Arthur, to B.C. Shipping Agencies Ltd., for Australia, and Ss. Gedding Court are early October listings.

Of four new Anglo-Canadian Shipping Co. Ltd. charters, Ss. Daidorch is looked for here before the end of the present month to load for Liverpool and Manchester. The other three, some of which may be diverted here, are Ms. Ell, due inward to load for Antwerp, Grangemouth and Leith; Ss. Dalhanna, due October 10 for London, and Ms. Alphonse, expected for B.C. loading October 20 for London.

Seaboard Shipping Company Ltd. October fixtures for Vancouver Island loading are Ss. Tilston Court and Ss. Everleigh.

NEW "REEFER" DUE

On her maiden voyage in the service of the Mosvold Line, the new Danish motorship Mosfruit, bound from Scandinavian ports for New Westminster, is in touch with Estevan radio station, reporting passing St. George's Point yesterday.

The Mosfruit will load refrigerator cargo at New Westminster and at Puget Sound ports before clearing for Europe via San Francisco. The new motorship has space for 90,000 boxes of fruit.

The Mosvold Line will operate four new ships in the North Pacific Coast-United Kingdom-Continental service. Following the Mosfruit will be the Mostun, due for the Fraser River in October.

ROYAL MAILER INBOUND

Ms. Lochkatrine, bound to Victoria from Rotterdam and London, will clear from San Francisco for this port on Monday, and is expected to arrive at the Rithet docks on the night of September 29, it was learned today. Adam P. Moffat, local agent for Royal Mail Lines and Holland.

America Line, has been advised that the Lochkatrine has four through passengers aboard, Mrs. C. E. Houghton, Miss J. Parrott, Miss H. M. Nicholls and J. H. Nicholls, all for Vancouver.

Lochkatrine will deliver 125 tons of general cargo here.

The 9,200-ton Royal Mail Ms. Lochavon, Capt. Francis Cooke, is now at Seattle loading for the homeward voyage.

ALL WHALERS BACK

The whaling fleet is back in port. Although statistics covering the season's operations have yet to be released by the Consolidated Whaling Corporation it is understood the catch is considered satisfactory.

The steam whalers Green, Brown and Black came in from Naden Harbor and today are berthed with the Grant, White and Blue at the company's Point Elliot wharf. The latter trio, which operated out of Rose Harbor, have been back in the harbor for some weeks.

AT PORT ALBERNI

The pilotage authority reports the British freighter Bonnington Court arriving at Port Alberni from Vancouver at 3:30 yesterday afternoon.

The Greek freighter Agios Georgios-IV, from Victoria via ports, is also reported at Port Alberni loading 1,500,000 feet of lumber at the Bloedel, Stewart and Welch mill.

The freighter Jutland was due at the Alberni Canal port today to load 2,700,000 feet for United Kingdom.

Smoke Grounds Prairie Planes

EDMONTON (CP)—Airplane flights between Edmonton and McMurray, Alta., were suspended today due to a heavy pall of smoke which reduced visibility.

A new forest fire in the centre of a timber stand on Eagle Creek, near Whitecourt, 100 miles north of Edmonton, was reported today. Good timber surrounds the new blaze in nearly every direction. No change was reported in six other fires.

Spoken By Wireless

September 23, 8 p.m. Shipping—BONNINGTON COURT docked at Port Alberni from Vancouver, 3:30 p.m. MCMFRUIT, Sweden for New Westminster, passed St. George's Point, 4:30 p.m. ALBERTVILLE, for Vancouver, 2:79 miles from Vancouver.

September 24, noon. Weather—Estevan—Overcast: N.W. light: 20.50. 55. light swell. Pacheña—Overcast: E.S.E. light: 20.94. 55. light chop. Swiftsure—Heavy E.S.E. light: 20.98. 55. light southwesterly swell. Cape Lazo—Overcast: calm: 20.96. 54. sea smooth.

Port Charges To Be Studied

Committee to Look Into Wharfage Rates at Eastern Ports

OTTAWA (CP)—A study of port charges, particularly wharfage charges, will be undertaken by a committee named by the National Harbors Board and the Inland Carriers, W. E. Campbell, director of traffic of the Board of Transport Commissioners and chairman of the committee, announced last night.

Effective April 14 last, the Harbors Board announced increases in top wharfage charges at Halifax, Saint John, N.B., Montreal and all St. Lawrence River ports, the increase being particularly large at Halifax.

Top wharfage charges are assessments on goods handled over wharfs. In addition to these harbor fees and dockage charges are levied.

For many years the Canadian Railways have absorbed the top wharfage charges because of the keen competition with United States Atlantic ports. However, the railways claimed the increases of April 14 made the burden too great and they published schedules to be effective October 1, announcing what portions of these top wharfage charges would be absorbed on and after that date.

Holland Plans To Add to Navy

THE HAUGE, the Netherlands (AP)—The government is undertaking a naval expansion program "to safeguard the country's overseas trade." It announced the plans include 11 motor torpedo boats, 10 seaplanes armed with torpedoes, six escort vessels and one reserve gunboat.

Unable to Sink Derelict Barge

Guns of Cutter Proved Ineffective on Buoyant Target

SEATTLE (AP)—The three-inch guns of the coastguard cutter Cyane roared unavailingly in an effort to sink a derelict barge which capsized between Cape Spencer and Cape Fairweather off the southeastern Alaska coast.

The barge Lawrence of the Puget Sound Bridge and Dredging Company, in tow of the tug Macray, capsized in heavy swells. When the cutter Cyane, en route from Unalaska to Ketchikan, arrived, the barge was floating with its bottom barely awash, radio messages reported.

The Cyane's officers ordered it fired upon, but buoyancy of the wood kept it afloat.

Radio Phones for Lifesaving Boats

TORONTO—Lifesaving boats at Toronto are being equipped with radio telephone receiving apparatus supplied by the Canadian Marconi Company. Superintendent Hilliard Lang has taken charge of the installation, and two speedboats already have been equipped according to E. L. Cousins, general manager of the Toronto Harbor Commission.

Toronto police department will act in co-operation with the new lifesaving aid. Police headquarters will call the lifeboats over their radio apparatus.

Now with the lifesaving boats equipped with radiotelephone receivers the crew will be able to receive directions and instructions at all times from headquarters.

Seven Marconi-equipped government radio stations are dotted along the Great Lakes shores from Fort William and Port Arthur to Kingston.

Hit-Run Love

Spotlighting the Heartache Trail Of the Careless Driver

CAST OF CHARACTERS

PATRICIA MCGRAW — heroine. She faced a choice between the law and love.

LARRY KENT — hero. He faced an even greater decision.

TOM SWEENEY — prosecutor. He awaited the processes of the law.

Last week: En route home, Pat sees Larry's coupe speed past her bus, dart into traffic. The bus stops abruptly. A woman has been killed, a child injured by a hit-run driver.

CHAPTER 3

THE ACCIDENT broke down barriers between strangers. Passengers in the bus were all discussing the tragedy. The woman next to Pat was voluble.

"Of course I can't be positive, but I think it was the coupe," she declared angrily. "The window was misted, I admit, but I saw it cut across in front of the bus just as we stopped. Oughtn't to be hard to catch the driver. It was sheer murder, that's what. I have a sister-in-law who was hit by a car last year. She was in the hospital for months, and her leg still bothers her. The police ought to do something to drivers who go like mad. It's terrible, awful."

The rest of a ride home was uncomfortable. The knowledge that tragedy had come so close made Pat nervous, depressed. Her imagination could all too clearly picture the grief in some home where a family waited unsuspectingly for a mother and child.

It was a relief to get off at her stop, to breathe in the cool, wet air, to be free of the talk, to turn her thoughts to her own affairs, to the date with Larry. Of course it was fortunate Larry had not been caught in the traffic muddle. Had he been there he might have seen the accident, might even have been called as a witness. And Larry hated such messes—pain, death, the detail of trying to identify anyone. She was glad he had been ahead of it all; not involved even as much as she had been for those few tense moments.

The bright lights of home welcomed her through the door, and the odor of food made her realize just how hungry she was after lunching on nothing but an orange. The familiar setting was dear to her. Though throw rugs were necessary to cover the room places on the living room carpet, though antimacassars were used to cover threadbare places on chairs and sofa, there was the warmth of a home about the rooms.

Hats tossed heedlessly on the chair nearest the door testified to the presence of the boys. The radio blared to a dance band. Bill sat sprawled in a big chair reading the sport pages, while Joe twisted the radio dial over to police calls.

"Hi, handsome," their young voices, deep bass now, greeted her. "Shed your coat, sis, we're ready to eat."

Her mother came in from the kitchen. "Yes, they've been ready for an hour. You'd think they'd been on a diet for a month to hear all this talk about 'hurry up dinner.'"

She smiled and put her soft cheek against Pat's. "Have a hard day, darling? I thought you'd be home earlier."

Trite, comfortable talk that pushed the outside world far away. Pat hung up her wraps, deposited her bundles in her room, brushed her rain-damp hair into waves. Downstairs the police call broke into a monotonous stream of announcements.

"Attention all cars, attention all cars. Be on the lookout for a blue coupe that struck and seriously injured a woman and child at 5:45 this afternoon. The accident occurred at Hazelwood and Fourth. The driver is wanted on a hit-run charge. No other identification as yet. Attention all cars while we repeat—"

Pat stood staring into the mirror, seeing her own eyes widen at the memory of the scene that flashed before her again. A blue coupe; thousands of them in the city, of course. No other identification as yet. A little stab of fear thrust at her heart, but she pushed it away. Thousands of such cars. Too traffic-conscious. That was all.

Voices from downstairs broke the spell. She gave her nose a final dab of powder and went down to the security of the family.

"Listen, handsome," Bill interrupted his attack on a well-filled plate to turn to her. "About those jobs Larry promised me and Joe this summer. Well, we'll need a car to get to work, and we found a swell bargain today; just a roadster, a 1930 model, that we can get for practically nothing. Artie Davis wants to get rid of it. He's going to camp this summer as counselor, and he'll let us have it for just about nothing. If we can make a little down payment we can pay the rest when we get working. We thought maybe you'd help us out on the first payment, and we'll pay you back pronto. How's about it?"

Pat hesitated. They were big boys now. Old enough to hold jobs, nearly through high school, old enough to get drivers' licenses, and yet to her they seemed so young.

She turned uncertainly to her mother. "It's not just buying a car," she said slowly. "There's insurance. You'd simply have to have that, and sometimes I think a car's a terrible worry. So many accidents happen—" her voice trailed off as the boys over-whelmed her.

"My gosh, Pat, we know how to drive. Haven't we been driving Artie's car for two years? It isn't as though we were beginners. You got a complex from that old traffic court," Joe said impatiently. "It's a wonder you don't try to make Larry stop selling cars."

Her mother looked at him reprovingly. "Pat's thinking of your good, young man. Boys are apt to be heedless. You'll probably speed, and get in accidents. It's always happening. I don't know what to say," she concluded lamely.

"Well it doesn't have to be decided tonight anyway," Pat said finally. "I just want you to realize, though, that there is a responsibility in owning a car."

The boys forgot the matter while they concentrated on ice cream made in the new electric refrigerator, and after the dishes had been done Pat thought of her date that evening. They were to go to a dance at the Country Club—a really smart affair, Larry had explained. She went upstairs to look at her dress—a last summer's party gown that she had freshened and brightened with new touches here and there. After all she hadn't known Larry last summer. The dress would be new to him, but whether or not it would be appropriate for a dance at the club was another worry.

Her fears disappeared when she went to the phone to answer a call from Larry.

"I'll be a little late," his drawling voice came to her. "Delayed at the office a bit, but we'll get there in plenty of time. Pick you up around 9:30."

She felt the exhilarating thrill that always came when she heard his voice. "Of course, darling. I was late getting home myself. Don't hurry. Just take your time—and be careful."

She had meant to tell him that he had narrowly avoided being held up by an accident that afternoon. If anything ever happened to him she didn't know what life would hold for her. She meant to tell him later just how fortunate he had been to be ahead of that crash.

The time slipped by magically while she busied herself with a shower, brushing her dark hair into a soft, curling silken halo, smoothing the lace frock around her slim hips, dancing a few steps in the new satin sandals.

And then it was time to go. Larry arrived, looking smart and blase in his tuxedo, his blonde hair shining. She knew he anticipated the party, but she hadn't expected him to show quite such concern.

A lot of important people go to these parties," he said, helping her into the car. "People that count. It can help me if I really get in with the right crowd. They spend money for cars all right. No cheap jobs for them. Why I just heard that Dottie Barnes is in the market for another model. She's the one I told you about last winter, 'member?"

Remember—of course she did. Pat felt the lace of her frock, looked down at the new sandals, wondered in a moment of panic just how she would compare with the other girls. Dottie Barnes with her cars, horses, servants, Paris gowns. She did want to help Larry, wanted him to be proud of her, to help him make friends, only she didn't see why he placed such importance on these people. The subject made her uncomfortable. She switched the conversation.

"I saw a horrible accident on the way home," she told him. "A car struck a woman and child—"

Larry interrupted roughly. "Now for heaven's sake, Pat, let's not talk traffic. You get it all day, and I should think you'd want to forget it once in a while."

She sank back in the seat at a loss. "I'm sorry, Larry. I didn't mean to. Tell me—did you have a busy day? Where all did you go?"

"It was busy enough. Went to High Hill about 5. That held me up and I went straight home from there. Didn't even go back to the office."

High Hill—far out north, Pat thought mechanically. High Hill and then straight home. Why he couldn't have been on Fourth then, at 5:45, if he were on the other side of town. She laughed at her own silliness.

"I guess I have you on my mind," he said. "I was raining and the traffic was heavy, but I thought I saw you. It just goes to show how one's imagination can play tricks."

He answered calmly enough. "Yes, your imagination did that time when you were on the other side of town and you didn't see me."

CHAPTER 4

THERE WAS NOTHING but music, laughter, color inside the doors of the club, nothing to remind one of subtle worries, groundless suspicions. Pat swung into the first dance with Larry, loving the firm way he held her, the ease with which she could now follow his every step.

Men in tuxedos, some rushing the season in white mess jackets, girls in gay flowered prints, fragile lace, gossamer georgette; jewels, flowers, perfume. The nearest approach to a movie party she had ever attended. She was thrilled into actually forgetting last year's frock.

She saw Larry's eyes suddenly grow alert, saw a smile come to his lips and a nod of pleased recognition as they passed another couple.

"Dottie Barnes," he told her under his breath. "Quite a looker."

Pat murmured some trivial phrase. Dottie Barnes wearing a dark flowered silk with a daringly cut, back, a flaring, astounding bow emphasizing the sleek line of her hips, a cluster of gardenias on her shoulder that made Pat's one bloom seem insignificant.

After the dance Larry manoeuvred until they were standing near the girl. There were introductions, laughter, the flip conversation of the smart set. Pat felt frozen, stupid with self-consciousness.

Tall, burly "Sailor" Bromley detached himself from Dottie Barnes and turned toward Pat. She looked at him with interest. Up to now he had been a name in the society pages; the heir to his father's woolen mills and millions and the place made by his family in the local "400."

A silky smile curved his lips, and a knowing, daring light danced in his brown eyes. "Where've you been keeping yourself, gorgeous?" he said. "Or have I been missing something?" She tried to keep up with the sophisticated swing of the conversation, but it was forced. "You haven't missed anything," she told him. "I'm new here. You see I'm a working girl enjoying her night out." It gave her a secret pleasure to see the way Larry's jaw tightened. She didn't know why she wanted to hurt him, make him angry, but something drove her on. The night was all wrong. It had started all wrong. It was so silly—the way he placed such importance on this crowd.

Dottie Barnes stopped talking when she saw Larry's eyes travel to Pat and Bromley.

"A working girl—Are you really?"

"Yes—a stenographer," Pat said calmly.

"She's more than a stenographer," Larry added in a tone she recognized as annoyed. "She's in traffic court; works for Judge Kelly. She also has a traffic complex—can't talk anything else but work."

Bromley took Pat by the arm. "How about a drink? Who cares how many cops are handing out tickets tonight. You're too pretty to start crusading anyway. We'll have a drink, and then do a little speedin' on the dance floor."

She looked about for Larry, but he was too engrossed with Dottie to notice anyone else. She felt Bromley's hand possessive on her own, and followed him down to the little barroom made to look like a ship. They sat on high stools and sipped iced drinks.

Bromley swung into his line again, making her feel that she among all these girls in their expensive, sophisticated gowns was the one that really mattered.

"And I'm getting my boat in shape. Taking her out on the river next week," he was saying. "After that I'll be prepared for company. As soon as it's warmer we'll go sailing. I'm willing to bet cash you'll make a decorative deck hand, too." He finished his drink and folded his arms on the little bar. "How about lunch tomorrow?"

"I'm a working girl, remember. I can't flutter around like one of these social butterflies."

"Don't want any more butterflies." He stared into the glass and his voice was husky, his words more thick. "Give a guy the run-around. But two can do that, honey. Let 'em go for handsome salesmen. Let 'em pay the bills. Too. Nuts to social butterflies—"

At least, Pat thought, he had called the situation correctly. He, too, saw Dottie and Larry in the proper light.

He looked at her as though seeing her anew. "Say—we were going to dance. Goin' to show 'em some fancy steps. Come on."

Bromley took her in his arms and they joined the others on the floor. He held her too close, but despite his foggiest he was a good dancer. Still she felt they were conspicuous. She tried desperately to catch Larry's eye, but he continued to ignore her plea. When he and Dottie passed he laughed and waved. "You two seem to get along."

The saxophones rumbled and the violins shrilled, the drums beat out a frenzied tattoo and the clarinet shrieked. They were near the door when it ended, and she felt tired and beaten. She didn't know if Larry avoided her because he was punishing her for the questions she had asked on the way out, or if he was deliberately making a play for Dottie. She only knew a dull ache filled her heart. And then she saw a familiar face, a face that smiled and for a moment gave her back poise and courage. She turned and unnoticed by the others, went into the hall.

"Imagine seeing you here," Tom Sweeney took her hand in a warm grasp of pleasure. "I'm glad to know you take time out to play."

"And I'm glad to see that you aren't always the prosecutor," she laughed. "Are you here for the dance?"

"No, came out this afternoon to shoot some golf, played a few nines, got soaked in the rain, then played bridge, had dinner, and now find it's time to go home for some well-deserved rest."

Her disappointment showed in her face. "Oh—I thought maybe you were here for the party."

"Not in these clothes," he grinned. "It's a tough break for me, because I can't even go on the floor for a dance." He glanced into a nearby deserted lounge where dim lights made shadows on the polished floors. "We can hear the music and we might be able to sneak a dance," he told her, with all the enthusiasm of a little boy. "I hate to miss a chance for I don't know when I'll have one again. There'll probably be a young man along here in a moment and, then I'll lose you."

... a familiar coupe had cut out dangerously, speeding away, other cars slamming on brakes, wheeling out—away from two limp figures on the pavement.

Her face lighted and she answered by moving past him into the room itself. Suddenly she felt free of the stiffness that had held her all evening. Here it was quiet, comfortable. Tom was kind, simple, her own kind. The music swung into a waltz, and she found herself held gently in his arms while he danced with an almost old-fashioned grace.

He looked down at her and she could feel his breath move tiny tendrils of her hair. His clothes were rough against her cheek: rough, outdoor tweeds that had a faint aroma of bay rum, tobacco, of wind, and rain, and sunshine.

The last bars of the waltz grew faint and the hubbub in the ballroom arose. Tom bowed formally. "Thanks for the grand climax," he said. "You haven't been discovered yet. Let's sit the next dance out."

A cool breeze blew in the open French doors that faced a deep couch. She leaned back, watching his profile lighted by the flaming match he held to his cigarette. "Yes," she said softly, almost afraid to break the stillness. "It's been a perfect ending—"

"It hasn't ended for you," he reminded her, smilingly. "You still have a whole evening of fun and dancing ahead. The parties here last long, you know."

She dropped her lashes to hide the feeling of unhappiness that flooded her when she was reminded that her evening would go on and on. That sensation of dread, of uneasiness, came back upon her. Things had been so perfect and they were now so suddenly changed. She felt lost, helpless. She wanted to lean over and hold tightly to his hands, to press her face close to that rough coat, to have him tell her that life was the same, and that the love between herself and Larry had not changed.

If only, she thought, Larry had the steadfast qualities that Tom possessed, and yet it was Larry's very casualness, his easy-come, easy-go manner that made her happy and carefree when she was with him evenings after work. She always felt protective toward him, loving to soothe his fretfulness when trifling events at the salesroom upset him.

She realized they had been sitting there for several minutes without speaking. The silence had been companionable. Pat felt Tom's eyes on her face.

"You shouldn't have to work," he said. "You should have a nice home, a loving husband, and all the time you want to dance and play."

She shrugged her shoulders and looked away to hide the feeling of the unknown fear that came over her again. "I wouldn't make a good social butterfly," she said.

"Well, that's a break for me, then. It means I'll see you at work on Mondays and Tuesdays and Wednesdays—for weeks and weeks, I hope."

CHAPTER 5

PAT FELT LOST again after Tom's good-bye, and turned back awkwardly to find Larry. He was still talking to Dottie Barnes, but he came toward Pat when he saw her. "Thought I'd lost you. Who were you with?"

She suddenly was tired of the party. "Sweeney, assistant prosecutor assigned to the court. He was here playing golf this afternoon."

Larry's eyes narrowed. "Acted like an old friend."

"He's very nice," she said. "Always helpful and considerate."

They danced and moved around with other couples for the rest of the evening. Going home though, she felt depressed. She supposed it was her own fault. People had been nice to her. She hadn't been a wallflower. Larry's friends had taken them into their groups, yet she had experienced no spontaneous pleasure.

The quiet of the early spring morning settled about them as they drove back to the city. Only a tiny rattle at intervals broke the monotone of the motor.

"Something must be loose on this car, Larry," she said, sleepily. "I noticed it on the way out, too. Is your fender hitting something?"

"Nothing's loose on the car. The hood wasn't locked tight when I had oil put in. That's all."

But the increased noise was not that of the hood. It grew louder when they went over the bumps in the country road. "Are you sure, Larry? It sounded like the fender or bumper then."

"Another car must have hit us when we were parked at the club," he said quietly.

She was drugged with weariness, unaccountably persistent. "We were last in line," she reminded him. "The same car was next to us when we came out. I remember because it was a grey roadster. And I heard the noise on the way out."

"I don't see why you get so worked up over a car rattle," he said pettishly.

She sat back in the car, awake now and with that unworried feeling of fear creeping into her heart again.

"Was Mr. Abbott in the office late this afternoon, Larry?" she asked. As soon as the words were spoken she wished them unsaid. Yet some secret fear made her ask.

"Abbott—" Larry said. "Sure. He was there at 5—" She sensed his sudden alertness. "I know," he added quickly, "because I called in. As I said, I was out all afternoon."

Her throat was dry, aching with the tightening of her nerves. This suspicion was building a high wall between them: a barrier built because of her unreasonable imagination, her stupid suspicions.

"The judge spoke of going over to see him," she lied desperately. Larry mustn't know she thought of him with fear and suspicion.

She had no cause to think of him as anything but honest, upright, kind, humane.

And yet the picture of those cars knotted at the wet corner, the coupe flashing in and out ahead, the crumpled figures on the pavement was indelibly etched on her mind. Larry had been on the opposite side of town. The car she thought was his belonged to another. The man at the wheel with his hat and coat like Larry's was another. Larry knew that Abbott was at the office at quitting time because he had phoned in, and not because he was there himself instead of at High Hill as he said. The fender, loose and rattling, was caused by another car while parked at the club. It wasn't the result of a body being struck and flung aside.

Her lips as they kissed him goodnight were clinging. She must make up to him for those unspoken fears, those shameful suspicions, yet as she tossed on her bed during the greying hours of the Sunday morning her sleep was troubled.

She awakened to the common-sense, prosaic routine of a rest day. Sundays could always be filled somehow. There was her trousseau to think about, weekend purchases to put in the big cedar chest, linens to unfold and finger lappily, a dusky red suit to knit upon.

It was afternoon before she found time to read the Sunday papers, and the front page story with pictures set her mind back in the frantic squirrel cage of suppositions again.

"Mother dies in hit-run accident—" The details were all available now. Mrs. Mary Gillespie, 38-year-old mother of four children, wife of a factory worker—dead. Her back broken by the racing car that knocked her down in an unprotected traffic zone. In the big, drear municipal hospital her six-year-old daughter, Jean, fought desperately for her own life and suffered from a broken leg and fractured skull. Police were seeking the driver of the car that brought grief and heartbreak to the Gillespies. They were said to have received some valuable information from two witnesses, but as yet no arrests had been made.

Pat thrust the paper aside, tried to busy herself with the society section, the comics, the women's pages.

"Where are the boys, mamma?" she asked at last. She wanted the security of the family about her. Wanted the boys' ready noise and humor.

"Oh, they still have this buying a car on their minds," Mrs. McGraw said, taking off her glasses and putting her paper down. "They should be home soon, though. We had a late breakfast, but you can bet they'll be getting hungry soon, and that will bring their home. Is Larry coming over, dear?"

Pat nodded. "He said he would. It's almost 5. He usually comes at this time on Sundays." (Continued Next Saturday)

Dorothy Dix's Letter Box

DEAR MISS DIX—Has a woman the same right to propose matrimony to the one she wants for a mate as a man has? Why should a girl have to sit around and wait for some boy to happen to notice her instead of going out after him and getting him if she can? Why haven't women the right to pick out their husbands just as men pick out their wives? I have asked a lot of girls what they think about this and some say "No," they would never propose to a boy, but these very girls have used all sorts of wiles and flattery to catch the attention of boys. So why haven't they the courage to pop the question and finish up what they have started?

INQUISITIVE GIRL

Answer: I don't know. Perhaps it is because women are more afraid of Mrs. Grundy than they are of anything else on earth. For nothing but a convention prevents them from taking an active interest in a passive part in courtship and proposing to the men they want for husbands instead of taking what they can get.

I do not think that there is anything else so strange as that women have fought for political freedom until they got it; they have fought for a right to an education until they got it; they have fought for a right to go into the business and professional world on equal terms with men, but they have never raised a finger to fight for the greatest right of all—the right to choose their mates. And, compared with the right to select the kind of a man you want for a husband and the father of your children, the right to vote, or take a college degree, or hold down a job is a poor right, indeed.

I believe that nothing would do more to do away with divorce and promote the general happiness in marriage than for women to be just as free to propose marriage to men as men are to women. I believe that women are wiser in love than men are, and that there would be fewer foolish marriages if they did the picking.

This is proved by the fact that women are not influenced by a man's looks as men are by women's. Very few girls would marry brainless little jelly beans just because they had Greek profiles and permanently wavy hair, yet every day we see men marrying Dumb Dora just because they have pretty faces.

Nor would we see the sorry spectacle of many rich old women buying boy husbands, nor widows with half a dozen young children picking out boys in their teens to be suitable stepfathers for them. Yet men commit these matrimonial blunders every day.

Furthermore, if every woman got the man she wanted she would be happy and contented, and a contented wife is a good wife. She is on her tiptoes to please her husband and is satisfied with what he can give her. It is the women who have married their opportunities instead of their preferences who are the peevish, discontented wives who take out on their unfortunate husbands their frustration and disappointment.

I am strong for women popping the question, and I urge them to go to it and to use all their salesmanship, just as men do in similar cases, to make the men they want see what good wives they would make and what a good thing they will miss if they don't marry them. We will have more and better marriages when women propose.

DEAR MISS DIX—I am a young man of 23, a university graduate with a good job. All my friends are either married or are going to be married soon, and they virtually kill themselves trying to rush me into marriage, but I am not ready for it. In business I have learned that success depends on cutting your risk as much as possible, and I intend to do the same thing in marriage by not considering a girl under 23, as my observation is that girls before that are dumb and childish. I also feel that I am myself ignorant and babyish and that I will be at least 30 years old before I am ready financially, emotionally and intellectually to marry. In the light of your experience and knowledge, do you not think I am wise in waiting until I am 30 and then marrying a girl over 23?

J. W. L.

Answer: I think you are a second Solomon and that there would be very few unhappy marriages if all men and women did as you say, "cut the risk" of marriage by waiting until they are ready for it.

For what is at the bottom of marital discord? Quarrels between husbands and wives who married when they were so young that they did not know what they wanted in a husband or wife and who find when they are grown up that they bore each other to extinction because they have not a taste or thought in common.

What's the reason there are so many men who are sore and disgruntled over having to support families, and so many women who are complaining about being tied down by their children and the drudgery of housework? It is the boys and girls who married before they had had their playtime, before they were ready to settle down and who are begrudging their lost freedom. It is the young couples who married before they had enough money to support a home on and who are so nerve-racked by trying to make ends meet that they have come virtually to hate each other.

And what starts both wives and husbands to philandering? Isn't it the men and women who have lost their taste for those they married when they were kids and who are seeking the companionship that their adult minds and hearts crave?

By the time a man is 30 and a woman is 23 they have come to themselves; they are what they are going to be; they know what they want in a husband or wife; they are ready to settle down. And when they marry they have a far better chance of happiness than they would have had if they had married when they were younger.

Recalling the "Tragedy" Of Woodrow Wilson

SCARCELY had the United States entered the World War when Woodrow Wilson revealed his ideals for a new international system which would perpetuate peace and security and justice to all nations. He hoped not merely to end the war quickly but to lead the way to a new freedom when the war was ended.

On January 8, 1918, in a most notable address, he enumerated his famous "14 points" which he declared were necessary to such a just and lasting peace. He was to see the allied powers adopt these points later as a basis for the armistice. At the same time he was to see his dream of a league of nations win wide approval, except in his own nation. Therein lies the "tragedy" of the wartime President.

For Wilson's failure to win domestic approval of his war policies presents one of the rare problems of American history. Wilson had led the nation through the war itself, had achieved victory, had even forced Europe's die-hard statesmen to adopt his peace program. Yet his own people turned against him. Personal and partisan factors, of course, contributed to this defeat, but the repudiation broke the President.

Returning east from a tour of the nation to whip up enthusiasm for his peace proposals, the President was stricken at Wichita, Kan., later suffered a complete nervous collapse in Washington from which he never sat.

Once Called World's Loftiest Peak

A VOLCANIC peak, towering 20,300 feet high in the Ecuadorian Andes, Mt Chimborazo awed the primitive Indian peoples, loomed in their eyes as the highest peak on earth. Like-wise, were early geographers misinformed, long regarding the mountain as the world's loftiest.

Then in 1820 Edward Whymper successfully attained Chimborazo's summit after many other attempts to scale it had failed. Whymper was convinced that Chimborazo was not the world's highest, but only the highest in the Ecuadorian Andes. Subsequently it was established that other peaks were higher, such as Mt. Aconcagua in Chile, Sahama in Bolivia, and Huascaran in Peru. At the same time new light was shed on the massive Ecuadorian summits of Cotopaxi, Cayambe and Antisana.

The Indians named Chimborazo from the designation, "Chim-puraza," or the "mountain of snow." It has no crater and rises 11,000 feet above its own table-

HOROSCOPE

Sunday, September 25, 1938

Benefic aspects rule this day which should be favorable to social and religious interests.

Women are well guided under this sway which encourages them to be faithful in responsibilities great and small. They are to be powerful in their demand for political reforms.

This should be a fortunate sway for churches of every faith since it encourages men and women to seek spiritual consciousness and character development.

Although there is a sign that aids harmonious association there may be domestic conflicts in which the young are aggressors. The family budget may bring difficulty to the home.

High winds and sudden changes of temperature may be expected this week.

Danger of infection will be serious in cases of slight wounds. New forms of deadly germs will be imported from foreign shores.

Wars are sowing seeds of disease which will find germination in lands of peace, the seers point out.

Secret aid for the Arabs in Jerusalem may precipitate serious complications through new alliances, it is prophesied.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a year of progress. Pleasant days will be many.

Children born on this day probably will be serious in their outlook on life. These subjects of Libra usually make their own fortunes and dislike publicity.

Monday, September 26, 1938

This is one of the rarely fortunate days in planetary direction, according to astrology. Benefic aspects rule strongly.

The stars encourage all forms of business enterprise. Merchants and manufacturers, builders and contractors should profit under this sway.

Banks and bankers are subject to planetary influences making for co-operation. Borrowing should be easier than it has been in recent times.

Those who seek employment may be disappointed since there is a sign supposed to inspire suspicion or lack of confidence in first meetings between strangers. Later, good luck may be assured.

The rise of new leaders again is prognosticated. In the marts of trade and finance young men will guide and in politics success will attend many who seek their first public office.

The stars warn that national economies must be practiced without delay. They presage financial difficulties for the early forties.

Whatever is progressive in education or science is under the best aspects. The remainder of the year is to be marked by great advancement in medicine, engineering, building and motion picture inventions.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a year of growth in mental outlook and general well-being. There may be gossip vexing but unimportant in consequences.

Children born on this day probably will be talented, secretive and independent. Subjects of this sign succeed through strongly individual characteristics or unusual intelligence.

Magintot Line of Unseen Forts Guards France

IN 1914 FRENCH military circles were inspired with a passion for the offensive a outrance, which caused them to disdain the means of defence by fortification, writes Robert Leurquin of The New York Times Paris Bureau. The famous Plan 17 did not lay down any other use for the fortresses in the east than as a pivot for offensives in the grand manner. The tragic results of that mistake are known: the frightful blood-bath at the beginning of the World War; the defeats in Alsace and the loss of the Briey basin. The French soldiers paid the price for metaphysical doctrine, for building on an abstract foundation to the neglect of the great primary truth that in war fire kills.

The lesson has nevertheless borne fruit. Today the whole French doctrine is expressed in terms of firepower, and for the defence of their frontiers the French no longer put their trust in human bodies, but in concrete and fire.

The Magintot Line, defending France's eastern frontiers, is the pre-eminent combination of passive obstacle and active defence. This French fortification hardly rises above the ground. The soldiers who christened it "the crust of the east" found the fitting expressive image. The building of the "crust of the east" will one day come to be regarded as one of the great labors of this century.

According to figures of the project given by engineer officers who superintended work, 12,000,000 cubic metres of earth were dug out on the Magintot Line between 1929 and 1936; 1,500,000 cubic metres of concrete were cast; 50,000 tons of steel plates were set in position; galleries were hollowed out which in a straight line would cover the distance from Paris to Liege; 15,000 workmen were engaged on the construction; 7,000,000,000 francs were spent. Today new works have been begun to extend the "crust" facing the Jura and to fortify the north. On the "crust" itself, as I was able to see, work never ceases; its defence is incessantly reinforced.

Great precautions are taken by the builders to assure the maximum of resistance for this "crust." The towers of the underground workings, which weigh some 120 tons, are monolithic, and no shell can penetrate their concrete walls.

Defence against gas is assured by a special process; electric machinery maintains in the interior an atmospheric pressure slightly higher than the exterior pressure. In order to prevent all communication with the gas poisoned outer air, and also in order to do away with all loopholes, the guns in the three turrets pivot on a ball mounted in the armor plate.

The gunners lay their guns as sailors do in the turret of a warship without seeing anything, simply by following the indications on a dial controlled by an artillery officer, who is in a hermetically sealed armored chamber. The artillery officers see the outside world through panoramic telescopes built into the armor plate. The men are protected by cusped embrasures, so that a shell hitting the concrete could not glance off the casing and wound the defenders.

The telephone lines, of primary importance for the transmission of orders and information, are buried five metres deep in concrete slabs. For each line there are at least two alternative lines on different circuits. This subterranean network ends in telephone exchanges installed 50 metres deep.

Thus protected, the soldiers of the "crust" can resist the fiercest bombardments. But that is not enough; in war it is necessary to strike—that is to say, there must be active defence.

The active role is played by the armament which the concrete protects.

Behind their cusped embrasures the men of the Magintot Line can cover the frontier zone with a sheet of fire. Woe to the man who sets foot in this steel caldron! Each casemate is a volcano ready to spit flames in front, behind and on all sides at close as well as at long range. All this zone of invisible death is further protected by lookout posts, alarm signals, periscopes, sound-locating posts, barrages of infra-red rays. All over the region there are spying eyes, listening ears and weapons ready by day and night. The whole countryside is packed with ambushes; one does not know where to set one's foot. It is like 300 kilometres of haunted country.

The Magintot Line can be thought of as a fleet moored in the chains of hills that lie parallel to the frontier. This fleet has flotilla craft to scout for it; they are blockhouses garrisoned by a dozen men whose duty it is to delay the assailant for three days so as to enable the higher command to gauge the principal point of attack. As cruisers, it has a line of artillery in revolving gun-turrets. Its capital ships are underground fortresses.

When the scouting forces have played their part they fall back, as on the sea, to the main body, by a system of underground labyrinths which has made the frontier region, to a depth of 50 kilometres, look as though it were covered with mole-hills.

The strength of the "crust of the east" lies in the diversity of its works; the variety of dimensions and of camouflage keeps the visitor in a state of complete astonishment. Between Cross-section showing underground workings of France's Magintot Line.

Metz and Besancon I visited more than 30 casemates and did not find two of them the same. Some were sunk in the earth, others crouched under railway embankments, other hung on the sides of precipices. I even found a casemate emerging from a swamp.

So much for the small links in the chain. But there are still the big forts, whose power of resistance is thrillingly impressive. They are nothing less than buried barracks with kilometres of passages lit by electricity and provided with metal tracks; they have hot water laid on, electric ventilators and cookhouses. Whole hills have been hollowed out and concreted. Every measure has been taken, including vitualizing, to make them habitable for months on end.

The line is permanently occupied by what French soldiers ironically call "ecrevisse de rempart." These "shellfish of the forts" are the men of fortress regiments recruited exclusively from the Paris region and the Department of Aude. They wear a khaki beret whose badge is a shield of gules with the device of the defenders of Verdun: "On ne passe pas."

The "shellfish" are distributed in squads of twelve men each over the first line of armored casemates, charged with the duty of holding them for the three days necessary to get the whole of the covering force in position. In peacetime these men live the wartime life of the trenches, with its system of relief; 15 days in the line, 15 days of rest.

The men have to keep watch, in rotation, day and night, in the alarm post which projects above the surface of the ground as the periscope of a submarine sticks out of the sea. At the slightest sign of danger the watcher must sound the alarm and the light machine gun comes into action to defend the approach to the casemate.

Simultaneously, inside the casemate, all the men spring up, helmeted, to take their arms from the rack, and plunge into the narrow shaft of the staircase, where the concrete of the steps and walls is as cold as in a tomb. They emerge into the turret built up in metal plates where the men on guard have already shut down the protective visor of the loophole.

The casemate is now lit only by a set of screened electric lamps. The men bring the machine guns into action while the actual gunners set in motion the electric chain which draws up from 50 metres below ground munition for the weapons.

Apart from the hours on guard, the "shellfish," like the legionnaires, work ceaselessly with pickaxe and shovel. They are forever digging, camouflaging, stiffening the network of barbed wire and tending the "asparagus" beds.

"Asparagus" are steel rails driven into the ground with their points upward. Their purpose is to arrest the progress of tanks. These rails are set at a slope and at different heights, so that the tank seesaws as it scales them. And, while the rails are tearing off the monsters' caterpillar tracks, the anti-tank guns, at ground level, will fire direct into their stomachs. If the tanks should escape this preliminary massacre, they would fall upon a second line, the "asparagus fardel" (savory asparagus), where each rail has a detonator on top which would explode a charge capable of gutting the assailant.

In the World War the shelter rarely deserved its name. For it a shelter has been substituted in the "crust of the east," which fulfills the formula of Marshal Petain: "The minimum of danger, the maximum of comfort." Throughout the line the shelter is distinct from the casemate and is as far away from it as possible.

Thus one fort sunk in the side of a hill has its shelter dug into the opposite side, to which it is connected by an underground passage 200 metres long. If, in an attack, one of the casemates should be forced, there are, as in a battleship, impervious partitions intended to hold the inrush of a wave—in this case of invaders. The galleries are divided up by movable metal-sheeted doors and interior gun chambers, which permit the fort to be defended section by section.

The men of the main line live near the forts, in portable villages of collapsible houses which fold up like concertinas. On the alarm being given everything is taken down and the men plunge underground. The longest time taken to occupy the large forts is 60 minutes.

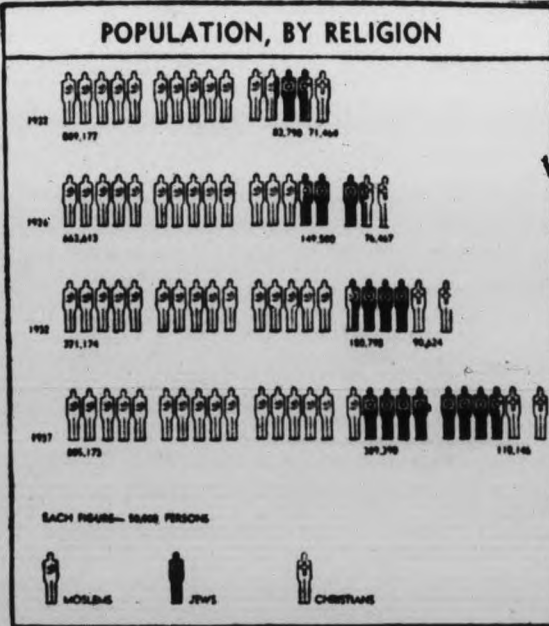

General Hagron, who before the war was chief of the general staff of the French army, used to say: "Our army must first of all be on guard; then we shall see." France is on guard in the Magintot Line; surprise is impossible.

As a visitor traverses the "crust" he can, with the aid of binoculars, look across the Rhine to the other side where are the observation posts of the Reichswehr. There columns of German workmen are making a system of defence identical with the French.

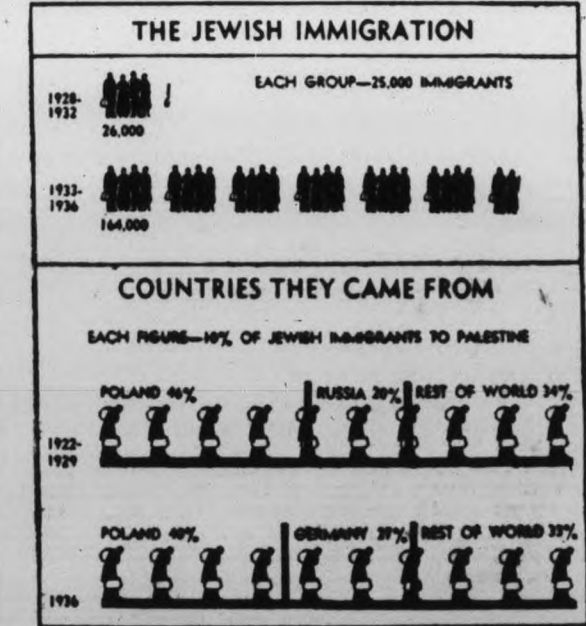

Why Strife Is Endless In Palestine, Home of Prince of Peace

As a holy land to people of three great religions, and as a geographical crossroad between Europe and the Far East, Palestine has been a place of contention since earliest recorded times. The accompanying pictographs, adapted from "The Puzzle of Palestine," a Headline Book of the Foreign Policy Association, tell today's story there. Since 1881, Jews from many lands have been slowly moving to Palestine to create a national homeland. After the World War, this movement was accelerated by a British mandate from the League of Nations commissioning the British to help create a Jewish national home in Palestine, yet to respect the rights of Arabs and Christians who also lived there.

Ever since that time, there have been ever-increasing conflicts between the Arabs and the Jews. The latter, filtering into the country in ever-increasing numbers under protection of the British, have built towns and public works, reclaimed land, and made great material progress. With such conditions, not only the Jewish but the Arab, and even the Christian population, increased rapidly. Today there are twice as many people in Palestine as in 1922. But as more and more land, and more and more jobs pass into Jewish control, the Arabs become more and more restless, a feeling which broke into bad rioting at Jaffa and a general Arab strike two years ago.

With the British, responsible for public order, holding a very hot potato, an effort was made to compromise. A Royal Commission recommended a partition of Palestine into a sovereign Arab state, a sovereign Jewish state, and a British mandate. This pleased nobody. Another commission is now studying revisions in the plan. On June 29, the British, who had often hanged Arabs for terroristic attacks, also hanged a Jew similarly convicted. Disorder flamed higher. More than 100 persons have been killed, and the British have had to move in about 12,000 soldiers to keep bombings, assaults, murders, and sniping from sweeping the whole country into chaotic civil war.

MUSIC

Wanderings of a Strad;
Musical Knight's Zeal;
Band Concerts Popular

By G. J. D.

"If music means anything to you, if it is a source of pleasure, inspiration or spiritual nourishment to you, you owe something to music. It is your duty to help to keep it a living, growing art. You must not be selfishly content merely to sit in the shade of the tree. Water it occasionally."

—Deems Taylor in his "Men and Music."

Concluding the article on Historic Violins Owned in Victoria

THE THIRD, AND PERHAPS the most important of the nine is the "Strad," dated 1690, which has a particularly clear and brilliant tone, beautiful in the line and design of its scroll-work and brilliantly finished, with its "voice" of soprano quality. This violin has been traced back to the castle of a Scottish duke. It, in some way, became broken, and the duke gave it to his butler, who in turn sold it to a gentleman. He, wishing it to be restored, took it to a noted musician, and evidently realizing its value at once offered a substantial sum for the violin, even in its broken condition. The offer was refused, and when it was repaired he gave it to his son. Some years after, this young man went to India, taking the violin with him. There he became fatally ill, and after his death the violin, with his other effects, was sent back to England. The father then sent it to his grandson, who lived in eastern Canada. When he grew up, not being particularly interested in musical instruments, it passed into the hands of our connoisseur. It bears the date 1690, a year when Stradivarius began to add a greater beauty, utility and originality to his craftsmanship. The "Betts Strad," the "Dolphin" and the "Emperor" shortly followed this period.

THE MODERNS IN THE COLLECTION

THE HINCHCLIFFE VIOLIN, a splendid copy of Guarnerius del Gesù, is a favorite of the writer, and the front of one of the Mitchell violins was made from a table-top 90 years old. The former violin maker constructed his violins in series, as in the case of 12 violins he named them after the Apostles, and the specimen in this superb collection is named "St. John." It is a particularly "friendly" instrument of most pleasing and brilliant tone quality.

The other violins are also to be greatly admired, which, besides "looks" and splendid workmanship, have lovely "voices," that in their wandering lives have become the more sumptuous, a greater delight to the ear and a solace to its playing owner.

MUSICAL KNIGHT PASSES

THE PASSING OF SIR LONDON RON-ALD (real name Russell, and brother of the impresario, Henry Russell), is a loss to British music; as composer (including over 200 songs), conductor (of many prominent appointments, chiefly in the central counties of England), critic (the Tatler, the Outlook, the Artist and the News Chronicle) and principal of the Guildhall School of Music, his was an active, distinguished career.

He first made his debut in London as pianist in 1890, but shortly after abandoned that career to conduct comic operas in the provinces, later at the Lyric Theatre in London and at Royal Covent Garden. He came more prominently before the public, especially the great London public, as conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra, and with the Scottish, Manchester, London Philharmonic and Liverpool orchestras. During these appointments he was a disciple of Elgar's works.

He was no stranger to America. In 1894 he toured with Mme. Melba as her accompanist and conductor, and in 1933 and again in 1935 he was guest artist with most popular success at the famous "Bowl" concerts at Los Angeles.

On the Continent, too, he was well known, where he conducted some of the famous orchestras at Berlin, Bremen, Leipzig, Vienna and Amsterdam.

BAND CONTESTS ARE POPULAR

THERE CAN BE NO DOUBT that band contests are highly popular. The recent competitions held in connection with the Canadian Pacific Exhibition at Vancouver again demonstrated the axiom: "about 20 bands were heard in spirited competitions."

On two occasions not so very long ago some band contests took place in Victoria, one, a huge affair, held in the old Arena; the other at the City Temple, sponsored by the Victoria Music Festival Association on a Saturday afternoon, when over 1,000 people were present and hundreds of young instrumentalists, members of the different bands, took part in the several classes. Since then nothing has been attempted locally, yet it is well known that such gatherings are widespread of interest, to say nothing of their inspiration and personal impetus and gain to the young players of musical instruments.

Question—Can an international band competition be staged in the capital city during some part of 1939? It would prove a big musical attraction.

Tales Nellie Hears at Sea BOOKS

By NELLIE L. McCLUNG
(Copyright Reserved)

(This is the first of Nellie McClung's articles of European series and describes incidents of voyage across the Atlantic, supported by stories told by passengers.—Ed.)

THERE IS SOMETHING about the sea that loosens people's tongues and draws them into a close fellowship. Perhaps it is its immensity that shrinks us down to atoms, its cold indifference that drives us to seek human companionship. There is no doubt that at sea people grow sociable, friendly and communicative. It begins when the vessel leaves the dock, and the yellow, blue and red streamers that billow in the wind grow tighter, stretch and break, and the faces on shore grow smaller and smaller, and at last run together in a blur, like the memories of the past.

I never like these drawn-out partings. I think we should say goodbye and walk away without looking back. But far be it from me to deny anyone the right to dramatize their emotions if it eases the strain in a time like this.

An ocean crossing is nothing new. Five days of luxurious life on a beautiful ship with a morning paper appearing mysteriously inside your cabin door, a radio in the lounge, concerts at night, a moving picture afternoon and evening, a library for the studious and a nursery for the children.

And plenty of good talk! The first good story I heard concerned a cat, and a British Columbia cat, too. The owner of the cat is a young girl who has a gift for painting animals, and she and her parents decided to go to Hollywood. There might be opportunities there for the young artist.

They had to take the cat, for there was no place to leave him, and he is a very smart cat. He can open doors and count, and will do what he is told.

It is not easy to break into Hollywood, even if you can paint animals, but this girl did it. She got up her courage, and asked a woman who was leading a dog if she would like to have his picture done, and from this came many orders. Which sounds like fame and fortune.

But though the dogs painted by her belonged to actresses, the remuneration was small and uncertain. The cat continued to learn tricks and was admired by some of his owner's patrons. After the family returned from Hollywood, disillusioned as to its pecuniary advantages, and settled down into life once more, there came one day a telegram offering the cat $400 for a part in a picture. He is the family cat in "Tom Sawyer," and does a fine act there when Tom gives him a shot of liniment in his milk.

STRANGE MEETINGS take place on shipboard, and we had one of them. One of the men at our table had the prospectus of a mine in the north, which a friend of his had handed him, asking him to look it over when he was on the boat. The story of the finding of the mine was interesting, and he told us about it.

A sailor's boat had been frozen in on an island and he had supposedly gone out with a pick to see what he could find. Evidently he knew something of ores, for he gave samples to someone who was coming out. The ores proved to be valuable. Part of them was assayed $35 to the ton and part $55. But the man who brought them out did not know the sailor's name—and there seemed to be no way of finding him.

A young man at the table suddenly became interested in the story and asked a few questions, which revealed an intimate knowledge of the island and the circumstances.

He was the sailor!

From him we heard the best stories of the whole journey, for his are stories that have no end.

It explains, too, a reason for his having forgotten about the ore he found. He has had other interests since then. He has been prospecting in another field.

It began in the north, and under thrilling circumstances. He and two other men were adrift on a northern lake; their boat had begun to leak and there was nothing they could do. It looked like the end, and an unpleasant one at that.

They had letters and parcels for people along the way, letters and parcels which would not be delivered. . . . As they waited for the end he opened one of the parcels which contained a book. After all, to read a book was as good a way as any to spend the last hour.

The book contained a new thought that God has a plan for every life, and as he read it seemed to him that he must not die—there was too great a reason for living—there must be some way of escape. And there was! Strange unbelievable escape from dangers, on the water and on a 750-mile trek in winter weather—back to civilization.

Now it might be by chance that they were saved, that the ice went out half an hour after they passed over it, it might be by chance that they recovered from "teepee fever" just by lying in their sleeping bags, it might be by chance that they escaped the storms and found their way in a trackless wilderness.

But the next story he told us could not have happened by chance.

It was a story of West Ham, in London, and it has to do with the changing of a man's heart. Changing the wind and the weather must be child's play when compared with changing a bitter heart into a loving one. The wind does not care much which way it blows. One direction is as good as another.

This is the story: Bill Rowell of West Ham, London, was a communist leader who hated parsons and policemen. He saw them and all those in authority as brutes and tyrants, and the police were afraid of him. One night a young man, a peer's son, knocked at Bill's door and got in. Bill did not know he was a peer's son. It did not show in his face, or in his dress. The two young men discussed the problems of life. Bill liked the other young man's frankness and the way he admitted his own faults. As a result of that meeting the peer's son went to live with Bill. There was no spare bed, so he put two chairs together and slept on them. He showed Bill a new way of serving his country, and Bill, being honest, decided to give it a try.

Now Bill Rowell is a leader in a new sense. He is leading people to understand each other; to help each other. His Communist friends thought at first that Bill had turned soft and deserted them, and they were ready to kill him. Now the whole district has been changed. The unemployed have been changed. Bill is doing more for them now than he ever did before. Instead of attacking society, now he is changing it. The news of Bill Rowell spread to the British House of Commons, where one Conservative M.P. told the story and said that Bill had shown him that if he wanted a new England he would have to start to change his own party. Fourteen members of the party immediately sent out a letter asking the others to come to a week-end gathering to discuss a plan whereby God would be given control in their lives.

Good is just as contagious as evil, and that is why I said this story is the kind that has no end! We have all sung about redeeming love, and committed verses to memory about the "faith that moves mountains." Miracles should not surprise us.

But they do.

Attie Salt Shaker

DR. HERTZLER gives this as his "prize laugh":

"Every berth of the Pullman was occupied. The loudest snorer I ever heard was going his best—snoring bits of grand opera or something. As eloquent snorers sometimes will, he occasionally held his breath for variable intervals. Once he had been silent for an unusually long time when he burst out with a loud blast as if to make up for lost time. Some wag shouted: 'Hot dawg, I hoped the son of a gun was dead!' There were loud catcalls and laughter from every berth of that car."

W. B. MAXWELL, who passed on recently, had a curious experience in the naming of one of his fine novels. It was eventually called "The Guarded Flame."

"First I had wanted to call it 'The Lighthouse,'" he related (in his memoirs, "Time Gathered"), "but the publishers informed me that there were already two 'Lighthouses,' and they asked me to give them without delay something else. I suggested one title after another, only to find that it was not free, until in despair I told them we would fall back on the name of the principal character and use that for the title—'Richard Baldock'."

"IMAGINE, then, my astonishment and consternation when I saw advertised the imminent issue of Mr. Archibald Marshall's new novel, 'Richard Baldock.' I really was scared by this. I dreaded to see Marshall's book lest by some devil's trick it should prove to be my book. It was not, and I had no further trouble beyond the changing of my hero to Richard Burgoyne. But as I said, the episode made me nervous."

ONE OF W. B. Maxwell's stories—was a born story-teller—was about a boy, aged 10, who overruled a famous Lord Chancellor of England. The occasion was a golf match; the Lord Chancellor, the venerable Lord Halsbury, and the boy, his caddy—who had forced him to count a second stroke after his ball had been pulled out from under the low-lying branches of a laurel bush.

"A harsh decision on the part of the caddy," soliloquized the eminent jurist, "and I cannot but strongly urge that if the ball was playable in law it was not playable in fact. Then how can one equitably be penalized, as if committing a misdemeanor, when only doing that which is unavoidable and inevitable. I would submit that if golf be really a game of skill, and not merely a game of chance. . . ."

"And he went on talking to himself until we reached the green," added Maxwell.

A GOLF STORY credited to Adeline Genee, famous dancer—now retired, alas!—is related by Arthur Croxton, many years manager of the London Coliseum Music Hall (in his reminiscences, "Crowded Nights—And Days"). Genee had taken up golf and had "even reached the stage of telling golf stories," says Croxton.

"One she told me was of two young ladies—non-golfers—who wandered over a golf course and, finding a nice smooth bit of turf with a little flag in the centre, sat down to rest. A couple of men in the distance shouted 'fore' and madly waved their arms, but of course, not having been introduced, the two ladies took no notice whatever."

"SOON ONE of the men came striding up."

"Don't you think it's very dangerous to sit here?" he asked gravely.

"One of the ladies smiled gratefully at his concern for their welfare."

"Oh, thank you very much," she said, "but we're sitting on a mackintosh."

P. T. BARNUM—of circus memory—in his last years, when in New York City, attended Sunday service at the Unitarian Church presided over by Dr. Robert Collyer, says Art Young, the artist (in his reminiscences, "On My Way"). One Sunday morning Barnum was seated in the rear of the church by an usher who did not know him. Dr. Collyer, happening to spot his friend, stopped his sermon to say:

"I see the Hon. P. T. Barnum is here. I wish Mr. Barnum would come forward and take a seat in my family pew. Mr. Barnum always gives me a good seat in his circus, and I want to give him as good a seat in my church."

IT WAS THROUGH the initiative of J. T. Delane, famous editor of The London Times—the original Mr. Tonans of Meredith's "Diana of the Crossways," by the way—that, in 1854, during the Crimean War, journalism, for the first time in history, saw a war correspondent appointed. This correspondent, William Howard Russell, earned undying fame, and made known his name wherever the English language was spoken.

"For 15 months, during his stay in the Crimea, Russell was the eye and ear of England," says William Dodgson Bowman (in "The Story of The Times"). "He had no official status and was described by the officers as a 'traveling gentleman.' He was unsparring in his criticism and his telling exposures of bungling and mismanagement caused a real outcry."

"And Tell of Time"
Another Big Novel
One Reads to the End

FASHION IN LITERATURE, as in most other things, follows distinct cycles. Fiction, in its early ages, was wont to appear in a three-volume dress. Shorter novels came later, and still later came the vogue of the short story. Now again we are in the period of lengthy publications, running to 1,000 pages or more; and if these continue to be written, as is the present book, in a manner to preserve intense interest in its readers, the latest style may last for some time.

In the ingredients for a successful book there must first be placed an intimate knowledge of the scenes and people concerned, but, in addition, a sure acquaintance of political and historical events that have much to do with the shaping of the lives and characters of the people in the book. Laura Krey has these in full measure. "And Tell of Time," published in Canada by Thomas Allen, gives us revealing sidelights of the ancestors of the family concerned, both as to his life in the Atlantic states, and that of his son, moving westward along the Gulf of Mexico, while she paints for us a fresher and older background of Texan life. Too often we have considered it to be merely an earlier picture of the modern rodeo, lacking all the qualifications of culture we have usually associated with the American southern states bordering on the Atlantic.

The story opens with the meeting of two cousins, the younger one from Texas, the other from Georgia, at the home of the latter at the close of hostilities in the Civil War. By the time the Texan has heard from his father, who had also been in the war as a doctor, he has decided, impulsively, to marry the younger sister in his cousins' family. He takes his wife back to his father's home, only to find that "Reconstruction here is of a more heart-breaking type than he had left behind. Almost from the day of his arrival, he and his father, a cotton planter as well as a doctor, are seriously involved by political events. The book diverges here long enough from the story to give a careful account of the actions of the ancestor of these Texan and Georgian families.

While Miss Krey writes in a somewhat leisurely fashion, the relation of events is never dull, nor does one want at any time to "skip" to the end. Yet the reader finds that the life of this pair, their friends and neighbors, their colored servants, and all the responsibilities so suddenly and overwhelmingly heaped on this young impetuous couple is told in such a manner as to depict the troubles of the state, the necessity of educating the emancipated servants, and all the dangers that confront the rapid change from slavery to citizenship.

This book is something more than a mere survey of state history. It is a document of human relations, for it treats of all sides of human activities. While primarily a story of the development of a boy and girl, hastily married, yet sure of their mutual love, it is also a book that teaches history in its most impressive form. Altogether it is a book that will bear careful re-reading, bringing pleasure at each perusal.—J.S.H.

A Poet's Fancy
Ran Off With Omar

TWO LITTLE BOOKS which ought to please a good many people are currently available. Each one is light—physically, and also in content—and each is gracefully and pleasantly done.

One is Stephen Vincent Benet's "Johnny Pye and the Foo-Killer" (Farrar & Rinehart).

This is a folklorish sort of short story about Johnny Pye, the New England lad who set out to run away from the fool-killer, and who in the running managed to wander all across American life, confront the eternal mystery of human existence, and become a symbol for questing and disappointed man. Mr. Benet tells the story with humor and tenderness, and while it is a slight enough story, it is well worth reading.

The other booklet is "The Rubiyat of Omar Kh-Yi," by Burges Johnson (Putnam). This is a compilation of doggish verse, and the principal item in it—as you may guess from the title—is an extremely clever parody of the poem that made Edward Fitzgerald famous.

One verse will give the flavor of this: Myself when young much eager leisure spent Watching a rabbit-hole with grim intent. And never knew through all those patient hours, He had another door where out he went.

Silly? Probably; but it's ingratiating silliness. If you are one of the great army of dog lovers, this booklet is pretty sure to please you.

Cowboy Songs

FROM 1870 TO 1890, 100,000 cowboys pushed 12,000,000 head of bawling longhorns up the trail from Texas to Montana and Dakota, leaving a rutty track across the grasslands and a string of ballads unique as American folk-songs.

These ballads, 218 of them, complete with music, have been corralled in a most unusual and entertaining book, "Cowboy Songs," by John A. Lomax and Alan Lomax (Macmillan). This is a revised and enlarged edition of a volume first published in 1910.

The cowboy made a song of his job in the heyday of the cattle barons, when beef ruled from Abilene to Cheyenne. He used a sharp staccato rhythm to stir up a lagging herd on the long steady trail drive in the day, and he chortled lullabies to soothe his longhorns bedded down for the night. Some of the best of the "dogie" songs seem to have been created to prevent stampedes, such songs coming straight from the heart of the cowboy in the stillness of the prairie night.

Still others rocked with ribaldry, mirrored the trials and dangers and work and loves of frontier life. John Lomax spent three years traveling by train and on horseback and on foot gathering these songs, recording them on wax records, copying them in bars, making notes by chuck wagon fire. A negro saloon keeper in San Antonio first gave him the music for "Home on the Range" in 1910. For 20 years it attracted no attention, then suddenly it emerged as one of the greatest hits of the radio.

Whether you've ever straddled a western pony or seen a bow-legged cowpuncher, there's a rare treat for you in this odd collection.

Looks Into Things

MOST OF US DOUBTLESS have an impression that a man who wants to put in his spare time studying the lives of wild animals has got to go far away to the untrodden wilderness regions in order to find any animal life to study. We might like to be amateur naturalists—but what chance do we have, with the great forests so far away?

There is a pleasant corrective for this point of view in Joseph W. Lippincott's "Animal Neighbors of the Countryside" (Lippincott).

Mr. Lippincott lives on a country place in Pennsylvania, not far from one of the most thickly settled urban regions in America; but there are all kinds of animal life to be observed, he testifies, if a man will just take the trouble to do the observing.

For you don't need grizzly bears, moose, panthers and mountain sheep to dabble in natural history. Less imposing creatures, such as rabbits, foxes, squirrels, owls, field mice, moles, skunks, raccoons, and so on are quite as interesting—and far commoner than most of us suspect.

So Mr. Lippincott tells of his studies on his own Pennsylvania acres, and makes an unpretentious but fascinating book out of it.

He has not been above making mild little experiments, at times. He discovered, for instance, that if you grab a skunk by the tail and hold the tail down, the skunk can't use his pet weapon on you. (The trouble, of course, comes when you let go.) He can also testify that a porcupine can throw its quills under certain circumstances, in spite of the experts.

For the most part, though, he simply tells what he saw and what the reader, with any luck, can also see. It's an extremely pleasant book.

"--And THIS Is Our Guest Room; It's Bomb-proof!"

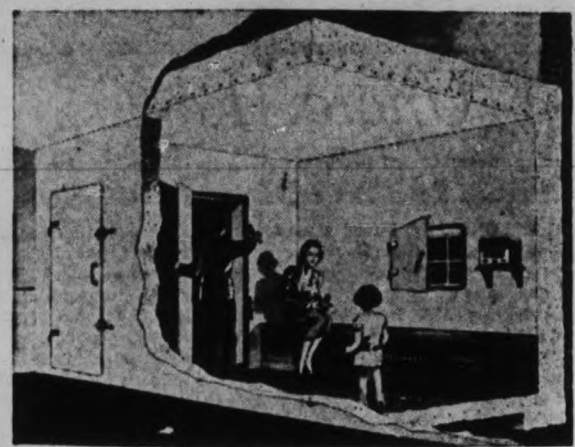

BRITISH HOUSEHOLDER HAS WIDE CHOICE OF SHELTERS, ABOVE AND BELOW GROUND, FOR WAR-TIME PROTECTION

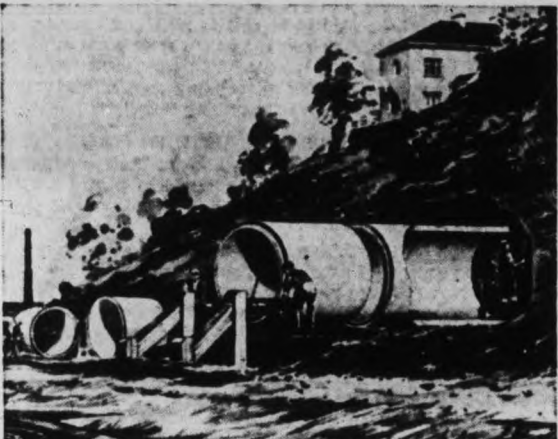

A simple type of bomb-proof refuge that will shelter air-raided Britons is this backyard concrete tube, entered through a manhole.

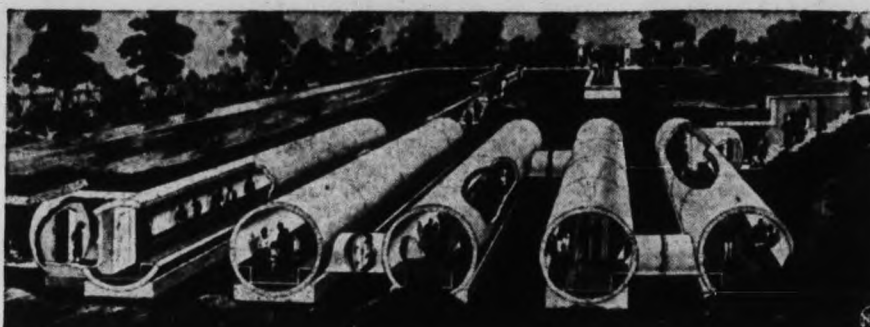

Another type of "family size" concrete tube refuge that is built under a garden. Shrubby and stones piled up on top in a sort of "rock garden" afford concealment as well as protection.

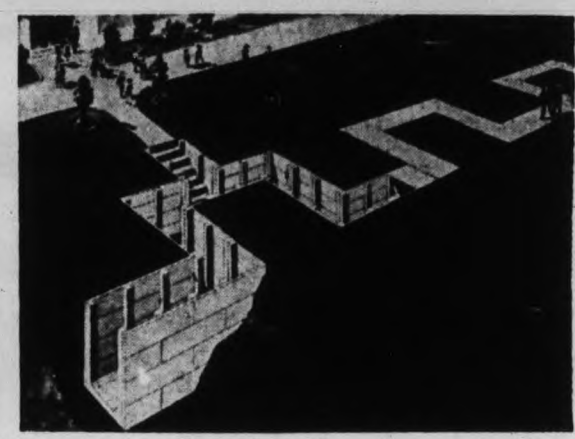

Built into the ground floor of a house, the concrete-walled room above is ordinarily part of the home. In war it's an air raid shelter.

Said to be proof even against direct hits are shelters made by inserting tubes into a specially-built gallery in a hillside.

Cheapest arrangement for large public splinter-proof refuges is in groups such as the one pictured above. They are connected by passage tubes which contain air-tight doors.

Zig-zagging through public parks may soon go such permanent air raid trenches as this. Lined with concrete, it will shelter many.

From a Correspondent
LONDON.

JOHN CITIZEN of Great Britain now can shop for air raid shelters just as he does for neckties or hats.

There is not much choice in material, because the one mostly designated is Portland cement concrete, reinforced with steel bars. But John Citizen can have his choice of various kinds of air raid shelters for his own home. He can choose whether to have it in the basement of his home or alongside it, or out in the garden beneath the surface of the earth. If he is the owner of a big shop or of a factory, he can buy bigger shelters to take care of employees.

All this pother is due to the fact that responsible men in the government are convinced that, if Britain is ever involved in a war with a first-class European power, large British cities will be targets for war from the air. Therefore, the danger to civilians, against which protection must be afforded, are mainly from falling bombs.

It is recognized that, particularly in dwelling houses, it would be almost an economic impossibility to provide complete protection from direct hits by huge bombs. But it is possible to have protection from impact, explosion, air disturbance or blast, earth vibration, flying fragments or splinters, falling building material, fire, gas, chemicals and bacteria.

For homes it is suggested that an air raid shelter should comprise a main room, an ante-chamber to form an airlock to prevent free passage of air from the outside, a smaller toilet room and a small storeroom. The best place for this is in the basement.

The Home Office has stated that in determining accommodation of an unventilated air raid shelter, 75 square feet of surface area, including floors, ceiling and walls, is to be allowed to a person for a period not exceeding six hours. Therefore a room nine feet by nine and eight feet high is adequate for six persons. If there were an air filter, this accommodation would suffice for longer than six hours at a stretch. The storeroom would be fitted up with first-aid outfits, rugs, tinned foods, water and other necessary supplies. It is estimated that such a shelter could be constructed for as little as $600.

Of course, the government is not relying upon people as a whole doing this for themselves. Therefore it is arranging for public shelters in case of war. Many big shops and factories are contracting for their own air raid shelters. These, accommodating many employees, will, of course, cost considerable sums of money. The Cement and Concrete Association has drawn up ready-made plans for these, based not only on their own calculation, but from knowledge of what the French and the Germans are doing in the same line.

Jupiter, Saturn Now Shine In Evenings

Former Leads Among Planets in Number of Known Moons

By JAMES STOKLEY
Director of the Fels Planetarium of The Franklin Institute
(Copyright, 1938)

VENUS IS NOW the most brilliant star or planet in the evening sky, but it is so far south that it is not easy to see, and sets about an hour after sunset. Thus, it does not appear on the accompanying maps, which show the appearance of the heavens at 10 p.m. on October 1, 9 p.m. on the 15th and 8 p.m. on the 31st. However, if you look towards the southwest soon after the sun goes down, you should be able to see it in the accumulating dusk.

But even without Venus, evenings of the present month bring us two planets. Towards the south, in the constellation of Capricornus, the sea-goat, shines Jupiter, the second brightest planet, of magnitude minus two, about a sixth the brilliance of Venus. The other planet is Saturn, which is in the southeast, in the figure of Pisces, the fishes. Its magnitude is 0.4, only about a tenth of the brightness of Venus, but brighter than any star now seen, with one exception. This is Vega, in the constellation of Lyra, the lyre, high in the west. Vega, of course, shines with its own light, while the planets are dark bodies, revolving around the sun, whose reflected light makes them visible.

Of the two remaining naked-eye planets, Mercury is this month too close to the sun to be visible at all. Mars, now distant and faint, might be glimpsed in the east before sunrise, in the group of Leo, the lion.

Vega is the brightest star now seen. Above it is Cygnus, the swan, with first magnitude Deneb. Nearby, to the south, is Altair, in Aquila, the eagle. Low in the northeast is Capella, of Auriga, the charioteer. Next to this group, to the right, is part of Taurus, the bull, with Aldebaran. A sixth first magnitude star of the October evening is Fomalhaut, of Piscis Austrinus, low in the south.

VISITORS LOOKING through the telescopes of an observatory find the planets Jupiter and Saturn probably the objects of greatest interest, with the possible exception of the moon. Jupiter has the ever-changing belts of cloud which seem to duplicate the imaginary parallels of latitude on a globe of earth.

The very remarkable system of rings of Saturn is its most attractive feature. These are a swarm of tiny moonlets, perhaps the remains of a larger moon that the planet once had. According to theory, this unfortunate satellite ventured too close to the planet, the attraction of which set up inside it enormous tidal forces. With the part nearest Saturn pulled far more than the other hemisphere, the moon was torn asunder, and the rings, now revolving in the old orbit of the moon, are the remains.

This may forecast the ultimate fate of our own moon, for the same theory supposes that it will, in the distant future, approach too close to us, and similarly disintegrate into a ring system around the earth.

This would then leave us moonless. Saturn was better able to afford the loss of one of its satellites, for it has nine others that can still be observed. Until last year, in astronomers' tables, it was tied with Jupiter, which also had nine moons, but now that planet has been discovered during the past summer.

THE HISTORY of the discovery of these moons make an interesting epitome of the progress of astronomical observation. Jupiter itself was known to the ancients, but they had no idea that it had any such attendants. During the first decade of the 17th century, the telescope was invented by a Dutch spectacle maker, who, however, seems never to have realized that it might have astronomical possibilities.

At the end of 1609, Galileo Galilei, an Italian astronomer, heard reports of this device. From his own knowledge of optics, he figured out how to make one, which differed somewhat from the Dutch instrument. On January 7, 1610, he turned his little instrument, only about two feet long, on Jupiter, and found near it what he first supposed to be faint stars. But, as he looked on succeeding nights, he found that these objects, four in number, seemed to be moving around Jupiter. This proved that they were not stars, but satellites, and so the first astronomical discovery with the telescope was made.

Later they were given names, Io, Europa, Ganymede and Callisto, in order of distance from Jupiter. They are about the sixth and seventh magnitudes, too faint to be seen with the naked eye, especially in the glare of the bright planet.

AFTER GALILEO announced his discovery, a German astronomer, Simon Marius, tried to take the credit. It seems that he had actually secured a telescope a year or more before Galileo made his, and with it had observed the satellites. But he did not realize what they were until after Galileo's publication of his discovery. Accordingly, history's verdict gives Galileo undisputed credit.

The following years brought the discovery of eight moons of Saturn, four of Uranus, two of Mars, and one of Neptune, but Jupiter had to remain content with four until the building of the Lick Observatory in California. In 1892, Dr. Edward E. Barnard took a photograph with one of that institution's great telescopes, which revealed the fifth satellite. No name has ever been given to this little body, which is much smaller than the four of Galileo, and is only about half as far from the planet as Io. Its magnitude is 13, so that a good-sized telescope is needed to see it.

In the winter of 1904-5, Lick Observatory again contributed, when Dr. C. D. Perrine found two more, known merely as six and seven. Their magnitudes are 14 and 16, still fainter than Barnard's No. 5. In 1908, England scored for the first time, when Dr. P. J. Melotte, at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, found No. 8, of magnitude 17.

THE EIGHTH proved very difficult to see, and satisfactory observations of it were very meagre. In 1914, Seth B. Nicholson, a graduate student at the University of California, was doing work for his doctor's degree at the Lick Observatory, and decided to make the eighth satellite the subject of his thesis. Therefore he had to photograph it, and when he did he found a strange object on one of the plates. This turned out to be satellite No. 9, of magnitude 19. The following year he received his doctorate, and joined the staff of the Mt. Wilson Observatory.

There, the sun, and studies of the heat radiation of the stars and planets have engaged his attention for most of the time. But during the past summer he returned to his old love, Jupiter, and its moons. The eighth satellite, elusive as ever, had been "lost" for many years, but he found it again at the end of July, using the 100-inch telescope, the world's largest.

Then, as he studied his plates, he found several strange objects.

One turned out to be an asteroid, one of the family of tiny planets moving between Mars and Jupiter. But two others proved to be new Jovian satellites, numbers 10 and 11! They also are of the 19th magnitude, so that only a very few of the world's telescopes are capable of showing them. There is no doubt but that they are real moons. Thus, Dr. Nicholson's score is now only one behind that of Galileo, while Jupiter easily leads in the size of its retinue.

AS FOR OUR OWN MOON, the table below indicates its phases. Twice this month it will recede from the earth to its greatest distance, when we say that it is at apogee. On October 2, at 6 a.m., eastern standard time, it will be 251,200 miles away, and on October 30, at 2 a.m., eastern standard time, it will be at perigee, only 230,000 miles distant. On the night of October 30, also, persons throughout North America, except in the western part, will see it hide, or "occult," the third magnitude star beta Capricorni. It will then be almost at first quarter. At Washington the star will pass behind the bright edge of the moon at 11:53 p.m., eastern standard time, while it will emerge from the dark edge at 1:13 a.m., eastern standard time, on the 31st.

For other parts of the country, the times will be a little different. A telescope, or a pair of binoculars, will help reveal the star when close to the moon.

EARS SHOW PATERNITY

Possibility of determining a child's paternity from the shape of his ears appears in a report from Dr. Thorald Quelprud of University Institute for Heredity and Race Hygiene, Germany. The shape of the human ear, Dr. Quelprud says, has a number of personal peculiarities which appear well-developed in the infant. Left and right ears of the same person are often markedly different, so Dr. Quelprud examined both ears in his study of 5,000 persons. Twin and family studies, including studies of fraternal and identical twins, were made to determine hereditary characteristics. Shape, length and breadth of ear, height of concha, length and form of earlobe, helix and tragus, length-breadth-index of the ear, scapha and other characteristics were investigated.

English Scientist Obtained First Oxygen

NOT LONG AGO I read a news item about a man who stayed under water two minutes or more, "holding his breath." At first his friends wondered how he could stay down so long. Then they began to worry for his safety, and reached down to pull him up—but he was dead. It appeared he had suffered a heart attack, and had not been able to rise to the surface before he was drowned.

That event has some meaning for us. It points out that we had better not strain ourselves by holding our breath too long. It does not mean that there is any special danger to staying under water for a little while—say a quarter of a minute—but we should make sure that we do not stay until lack of air hurts the heart or does some other damage. To go under water for a short space now and then is good practice, and may help save a person from too great "fear of the water."

LACK OF AIR is what causes drowning. A person may die from the same cause while on solid ground. The story of the "Black Hole of Calcutta" often has been told. One hundred and forty-six prisoners were jammed into a room about the size of an ordinary parlor or living-room, and were left there to pass a hot night. The two small windows in the room did not let in enough air, and in the morning all except 23 of the prisoners were dead.

We live in the midst of a great ocean of air. It spreads all around the earth and reaches up to a height of more than 200 miles. The higher we go on a mountain, the thinner we find the air. At a height of five or six miles the air is so thin that it will not keep a person alive. Aviators who go to great heights must provide themselves with a supply of oxygen.

OXYGEN IS THE MOST IMPORTANT part of the air, the part which does most to keep us alive. Less than one-quarter of the air is oxygen.

Nowadays it is possible to take oxygen from the air, and to store it for use on high trips in airplanes and balloons. We may thank oxygen, and the men who learned how to take it from the air, because they made it possible to explore the stratosphere.

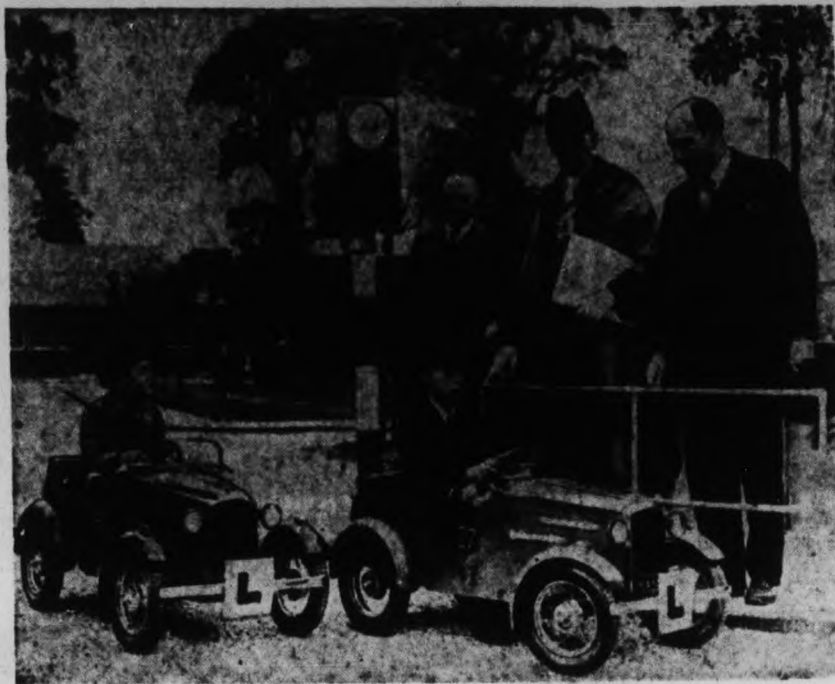

Joseph Priestley, an English scientist, is honored as the man who first "made" oxygen—that is, found a way to take it from the air. He called the gas "dephlogisticated air." Here is a shortened account of a few things he said about it:

"When a lighted candle is placed in a jar of the gas a strong, hot flame is produced. Pure dephlogisticated air might be helpful to the lungs when common air is not enough. It might be useful as a medicine, but would not be so proper for the healthy state of the body. As a candle burns out much faster in it, we might 'live out too fast' if we breathed it very long.

"Having found that mice will live in this pure kind of air, I breathed a jar of it through a glass syphon. The feeling of it to my lungs was not very different from common air, but I fancied that my breast felt light and easy for some time afterward."

ANOTHER MAN WHO MADE TESTS with the strange gas was a Frenchman, Lavoisier. Like Priestley, he did his work a century and a half ago. He gave us the present name, "oxygen," and also learned some interesting facts about air and sulphur. Here is part of a letter he wrote:

"About eight days ago, I found that when sulphur is burned it will not lose weight. On the contrary, it will gain weight. From a pound of sulphur we can obtain more than a pound of vitriolic acid. The weight is added because a great deal of air combines with the vapors while the sulphur is burning."

Mosquito Not to Blame

Young Reader Asks What Insect Is Responsible for Sleeping Sickness; It Is the Tsetse Fly

DO MOSQUITOES spread sleeping sickness? That is a question a young reader asked some time ago.

Mosquitoes have many sins to answer for, but not sleeping sickness. Mosquitoes spread malaria, also yellow fever, and they are a pest in general, but certain kinds of flies are the guilty ones in spreading sleeping sickness—at least the kind of sleeping sickness we hear so much about in Africa.

Those flies are classed in the "Glossina genus." The worst of them is known as the tsetse fly. The name "tsetse" is pronounced "set-see."

Sleeping sickness is widespread in some parts of western and central Africa, also in Rhodesia. It usually starts with a fever which lasts about a week. Red markings appear on the skin, and after the fever goes away it comes back from time to time. The victim finds it hard to do his work, or even to walk about.

A half-sleeping, half-waking spell comes on. The victim loses weight, and then dies.

That is what is likely to happen if medical help is not given. Drug treatments invented in Germany and France have proved helpful when given in the early stages of the disease.

White persons are in grave danger of death if bitten by tsetse flies which carry the germs. In some parts of Africa, however, the natives may be bitten with no sickness following. It is believed that they have built up an "immunity" against the disease.

The fact that not all African natives are safe from the illness was brought out by what happened in Uganda. Sleeping sickness spread to that colony in 1901, and in five years about 200,000 natives died.

Tsetse flies may be compared to houseflies in general size and shape, but their bodies have brownish and yellow coloring. Like mosquitoes, they can "bite" through the skin and draw out blood.

Tsetse flies seem to obtain germs from antelopes and other wild animals which do not actually fall sick with the disease. The germs pass through a new stage of life inside the flies, then are passed to people whom the flies bite.

Men would be more wise if they spent their time and money fighting tsetse flies, mosquitoes and other pests instead of on armies and navies.

NONSENSE

"What, Tommy? You don't know what arithmetic is?"

"No, father."

"But that's absolute nonsense. Do you know what nonsense is?"

"Yes, father. An elephant hanging over a cliff with its tail tied to a daisy."

SOME FROGS

A visitor to Arizona during the dry season approached a native and asked, "Doesn't it ever rain here?"

"Rain, sir, rain!" replied the native.

"Why, we've got some frogs here five years old that ain't learned to swim yet."

Sunspots

Every Eleventh Year They Make Trees Grow Larger; Interfere With Our Electrical Systems

EVERY 11 YEARS sunspots are at their maximum, and every 11 years the growth of trees is greater than normal. Trees cut down in Arizona and California have recently been examined, and their rings were more widely spread apart every 11th year, proving that in those years the trees had grown more rapidly.

Sunspots have other influences on the earth not so beneficial. Generally considered to be gigantic explosions taking place on the surface of the sun, these phenomena seriously interfere with terrestrial telegraphic and telephonic communication, they upset electrical signaling systems, they wipe out radio short waves, they drive ships out of their course by deflecting the compass needle.

Scientists are beginning to believe that it is not the actual sunspot that causes all the mischief, so much as the fiery "prominences," giant, incandescent jets of flame that are shot thousands of miles into space from the disturbed face of the sun. Traveling at the rate of 1,000 miles a second, some of them enter our atmosphere, where they discharge their electricity. The Aurora Borealis is thought to be caused by these electrically charged particles traveling along the lines of the Magnetic Pole.

In India bananas two feet long are grown. When dried, the skins of these mammoth bananas are used to make baskets and mats.

Willie Winkle

New It's Music Lessons

IF IT AIN'T ONE KIND OF LESSON IT'S ANOTHER. No sooner do we get back to school and starting finding out about our new lessons and work than all the mothers in the neighborhood get thinking we've got too much time on our hands and that they'd better get the music teachers busy. Then the mothers go in what you might call a huddle and talk over music teachers. They wonder whether they should make a change and whether Miss Somebody isn't a better teacher than Miss Anybody.

Well, as far as we go, it's back to our old teacher, and she's good, but I guess it's just that music ain't in my line. I guess it's all right for girls, but boys have got to make a living. Anyway, when I want some music I can get it on the radio, any kind of music; but my arguments don't do much good. My mother has got some very great arguments herself. Listen to this one:

"Some day you'll be glad to be able to play," says my mother. "When you grow up you may have to go away from home, and if you are musical you'll meet nice people. You may want to join an orchestra, but anyway, no matter where you go, you'll find it nice to sit down and play when you haven't anything to do."

AND THEN MY FATHER SAYS SOMETHING LIKE THIS: "All the great men are musical. Look at Professor Einstein. He plays the violin. Why, even the great Nero played a fiddle. Sometimes when I get tired I find it nice to sit down and play a tune on the piano."

"You haven't been tired for a long time, then," I said.

"What do you mean?" asked my father.

"Well, I haven't heard you play the piano for months," I said.

"I've been too busy, and besides, you children always have the radio on listening to some trash and I couldn't play if I wanted to," said my father.

"We won't argue any more about it," said my mother. "You'll start your lessons next Monday afternoon."

"Aw, gee, that's the day we'll be playing football," I said.

"That will do, young man. You'll just have to put off your football; music is more important," said mother.

THAT'S WHEN I WENT DOWNSTAIRS to see Nipper, my dog. He's the only one that understands me. I sat on a block of wood and ruffled up my hair, and Nipper came over and stuck his head on my knee, and then I stroked his head and talked to him. He's got sympathy, and then we went off for a walk around the block. But it was no good. The first kid I ran into was Jack, and he was mad, too. Sure it's music with him, too, only he's going to have his lessons on Tuesdays.

"About the only music I'll ever be able to play will be that jitter-bug stuff, I guess, 'cause you don't have to count time or anything, do you?" Jack said.

"I don't know. The only time I can count is the half-hour practice I have to do," I said. "Can't monkey with the clocks in our house either, 'cause they're electric and up on the wall."

Just then we heard some awful noises coming out of Skinny's backyard. We hustled over, and there he was taking his music lessons. His mother had chased him out of the house. What do you think he was learning to play? A bugle.

Yes, he got hold of one somewhere and said he was going to be a bugle boy when he got a little older. And what a racket he made. He could play about two notes. Boy, I'll bet the neighbors will soon be paying him to go miles away to practice.

DON'T YOU HAVE TO TAKE MUSIC LESSONS?" I asked Skinny.

"Me? What do you think?" said Skinny. "Them's old-fashioned. Show me a boy that takes music and I'll show you a sissy."

"Well, here's one," said Jack. "And I ain't no sissy. It's my mother. If you think I'm a sissy, come on."

"Aw, cut it," I said as I grabbed Jack's arm. "If we've got to fight let's fight over something good, not music. And you get this, too, Skinny. I'm taking music lessons again this year, and it ain't that I'm a sissy. I just got to."

"Wonder when we're any good at music, say 50 years from now, what kind of music they'll have?" Jack said, changing the subject. "The way they're going now you'll just have to put a couple of clothes-pins on your ears and tie a piece of string between them and you'll be able to get music right out of the air," Skinny said.

"My mother's going to spend a whole lot of money on my sister Doris and make a concert pianist out of her," said Jack. "Then she'll make a lot of money and we'll have swell things."

"That's what you think," I said. "It'll just be like lots more girls. Doris'll spend a lot of time practicing and your dad'll have to earn a lot of money to pay for it, and then along about the time she's 21 she'll marry somebody like Skinny and have to work for the rest of her life."

"Any girl that marries me will get a prize," Skinny said.

"Some prize," said Jack. "Your wife'll go crazy trying to keep you clean and dressed right."

"Aw, but when I grow up I'll be different," said Skinny, who didn't seem to get sore for a change. "I'll be a slick dresser and I'll use oil on my hair like you pair of sissies. And I'll dress my wife up, too. Boy, any girl will be glad to marry me."

We tried to talk back, but Skinny put that blooming bugle up to his lips and blasted away. It was awful, so Jack and I walked home.

SPOILT THE TRICK

A well-known magician, who wore a goatee and moustache, happened to see a man who was his exact double. The magician engaged the man to assist him in a substitution trick.

"When I jump into the trunk," he said, "you jump out of your seat in the audience, come up on the stage and the people will think it's me."

That evening the magician jumped into the trunk and closed the lid, and at the same instant the double arose in his seat and yelled: "Here I am."

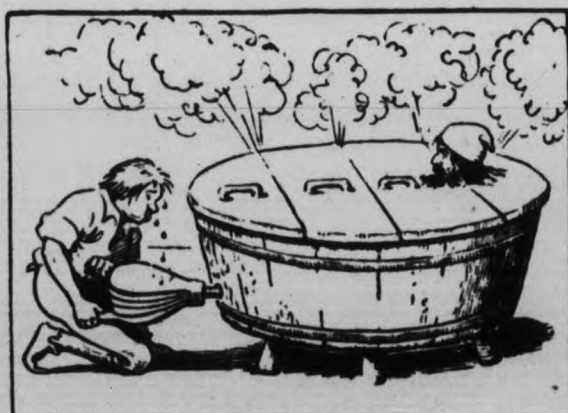

But the trick failed miserably. The new assistant had wanted to look his best in his new job. So he had shaved off his whiskers.

The silkworm possesses a pair of silk glands, each measuring five times the full length of the body.

OLD BATHING CUSTOMS

Huge bath palaces were built by the ancient Romans. Some of them were large enough for from 1,500 to 2,000 bathers. They were open to the public, sometimes for a small fee, sometimes free of charge. Here we see a hotroom in a bath heated by wood-burning furnaces. Heat was admitted to the room through openings in the walls. The bath palaces were used as gymnasia, restaurants and clubhouses as well as for bathing.

During the Middle Ages in Europe, bathing was by no means a common custom. Here we see a nobleman taking a steam bath in an odd tub. A servant is "puffing up" steam rising from hot water only a few inches deep. Just how the nobleman kept from being scalded by the hot water is not clear. His servant seems to be working hard with the bellows he has poked into a hole in the tub.

A century ago, most private homes did not have bathrooms, and even some of the palaces were without them. We are told that in 1854 the Austrian empress Elizabeth said she would not live in the Imperial Palace in Vienna until a bathroom was put in it for her use—and some persons said this empress was rather "queer." In olden days, men made a living by renting out tubs or barrels by the day. They went about shouting, "Who wants a bath?"

How to Be a "Big Shot" Statesman... Grow Yourself a Moustache

By JOHN SHEA

MOST OF EUROPE'S big shots are brothers under the nose. You can take it for what it's worth—but the truth is that European super statesmen with bare upper lips are rare indeed.

Bold Adolf Hitler, one of the most important figures in the world today, has a moustache (or half of one). And he's proud of it, but becomes furious when people compare it to Charlie Chaplin's.

Hitler is believed to be pointing his moustache at Czechoslovakia, a country run by another mustachioed man, President Edouard Benes.

Benes expects some support from his pal Joe Stalin, who favors a modified form of the handlebar moustache. But Stalin hesitates to get his Soviets mixed up in the European imbroglio because of the threat of Japan with her little Emperor Hirohito and his little moustache.

Back in Europe again, we find mustachioed boys in the driver's seat in Great Britain. Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, another moustache wearer, put himself right on top in his nation by getting Parliament to back his let's-be-pals attitude toward Germany and Italy.

Angered by Chamberlain's stand was Anthony Eden, who sports one of the world's most carefully tended moustaches. Young Eden quit as foreign secretary when Britain refused to protest the Nazi move into Austria, where the head man is Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg, another who affects a fancy lip.

Insiders believe Italy permitted the Nazi coup in Austria only after Mussolini had made a deal with Hitler to insure ultimate victory in Spain for Fascist Francisco Franco, still another proud wearer of the moustache.

Mussolini, by the way, is the exception that proves the rule. Belligerent Benito lip—he has no hair on the top of his head.

Jackie, the $100-a-day Lion, Is a Model of Consideration

He Owes His Success to Trainer Kootz, Who Raised Him to Be a Gentleman

This tender scene ought to give you a pretty good idea of the degree of civilization that has been trained into Jackie, the movie lion. Whether Jackie was rocking Trainer Melvyn Kootz to sleep or Kootz rocking Jackie to sleep the photographer failed to report.

WHENEVER you see a lion in a movie, you may be pretty sure that Melvyn Kootz had a hand in the proceedings. Kootz and his troupe of lions—or at least his head lion, Jackie—have worked in more than 200 pictures, and are now busy over at RKO in "Peck's Bad Boy With the Circus." A lot of the humor of the film will depend on how the trainer handles his beasts.

Nobody doubts that he will handle them safely. The camera crew set up their equipment inside the big cage for some of the shots, and not all of the eight lions used in this picture are as docile as Jackie.

Brutus, for example, is a mean scamp, but Kootz says that's only indignation at his small salary of $10 a day, and is pretty smug about it.

Jackie is 11 years old, weighs 450 pounds and is affectionate, well-mannered and obedient. Most of the time he doesn't have to endure the indignity of being caged and is the only so-called wild animal which ever is allowed loose on movie sets.

Actors pet him and some of the show-offs push him around playfully as they would a big dog. Kootz has only one rule about his treatment—no wrestling.

"Jackie likes to wrestle," the trainer said, "and it's instinctive for him to put out his claws. He wouldn't hurt anybody intentionally, but if an actor got scared and tried to pull away, he might snag himself on the claws."

Some trainers carry two guns, one with bullets and one with real blanks, when they enter a cage. Kootz carries only a chair and a whip. He says blanks are too likely to injure a lion's eyes.

Visitors on the "Peck's Bad Boy" set are inclined to doubt Kootz' assurances that his cats are harmless, because they see a man standing outside the cage with a rifle and a six-shooter. Talking with this guard, a Mr. J. F. Lee, I found that he isn't there to protect the actors and crew, but to protect the lions.

Lee is a representative of the A.S.P.C.A., but he is paid by the Producers' Association. British motion picture distributors will not buy films about animals unless they are accompanied by affidavits proving that the animals were humanely treated during the making of the pictures.

IT'S THE FIRST SLAP THAT TELLS THE TALE

"Bringing up a lion is about like training a child," Kootz said. "If you don't discipline a kid when he gets out of line, he'll grow up to be an outlaw."

"The first time you slap a lion is the most critical moment in his life as far as his future is concerned. And maybe in yours."

"The first time you give him a sock for doing a wrong thing, he may decide that he doesn't like you any more. And a lion is awful stubborn, once he gets an idea like that."

"On the other hand, if he takes his first punishment with good

HOW TO FISH AND NOT GET CAUGHT

1—Fishing is a joy, says Robert Benchley, only when you have a comfortable seat and you didn't have to ride all night to get there.

2—A strike... and what a fine ichthyological specimen it is. Now comes the familiar problem of what to do with the darn thing.

3—Might as well look into this situation thoroughly while we're about it... maybe there is something worth fishing for, after all.

4—Ho, hum... so this is what people spend hours in a broiling sun, to catch. (You'll get the rest of this fish story when you catch Benchley's new movie, "Courtship of the Newt.") grace, you can be pretty confident that he can be trained."

LIFE BEGINS AT 54

The comedy team of Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy seems to be broken up irreparably, and the Roach studio's new combination of Harry Langdon and Hardy will make non-slapstick comedies.

You probably remember that Langdon, now 54, used to be a very popular and wealthy comedian. Through bad advice, he chopped his production budgets in half and began making semi-quickies. Result was that his last three pictures were among the sourest ever seen anywhere.

His entire fortune went into the stock market and he went out of pictures.

Langdon is still remembered, though. Recently he played a bit role as a minister in "There Goes My Heart," and spontaneous applause from preview audiences are greeting his appearance on the screen.

Feels Ancestry's A Horsefeather In His Cap

By PAUL HARRISON

HOLLYWOOD.

AN INTERVIEW with Gene Autry's horse:

Q—Champ, I'd like to get a story from you about being a star of horse-opera.

A—That's a cinch; just wait till I get this saddle off. You want to go in my dressing-room here? The trailer, I mean. It's the biggest trailer in town, pulled by a 160-horsepower (and I'm not one of them) truck. Not that I think the automobile ever will replace—

Q—No, of course not. But let's talk about you, and from the beginning. Have you any famous ancestors?

A—Ha!—If you'll pardon the horse laugh—I've got ancestors back to Lady Godiva's time. And there's a good story about that incident, because it put its mark on my father's family!

That Godiva business happened about 300 generations ago. You see, when this dame, who was just after publicity, started riding through Coventry, her horse was white. Yessir—pure white! But the situation got very embarrassing as they went along.

Old gentlemen would stop and say, "My word, isn't that a pretty white horse!" And kids would yell, "Hey, lady, you forgot your spurs!"

Well, this horse, my ancestor, got to blushing, and he blushed so hard that he turned into a sorrel. Pretty soon the cops caught up with Lady Godiva.

"Whoa is me!" said my ancestor, when he saw them coming. The sergeant read a warrant for a woman on a white horse, neither of them wearing a bit. But this filly, Godiva, said, "Neigh, neigh! You boys better trot back to your checker game, because this is a horse of another color!"

THERE WERE FINE FOLKS ON MAMA'S SIDE, TOO

Q—Very interesting. And your family have been sorrels ever since?

A—That's right, in my father's family, anyway. They descended to the famous Morgan strain of trotters, in Vermont, and my father was a Morgan. Mein foder also was a mudder. That is, he was good on a muddy track.

My mother came from undistinguished but hardy western pioneer stock, from down around Gallup, N.M. She met papa when he came from the east on a barn-

"What! An interview!" laughed the horse star. "Not on your life!" But Harrison kept turning on the charm, and it wasn't long before he couldn't get a word in edgewise. Surely you recognize the horse. It's Champ, the steed of Gene Autry of the horse-operas.

I get my dramatic talent from both sides of the family, because mother was cur-r-azy about show business and she sometimes played in rodeos, and she would stand for hours admiring circus posters on the barn.

When Sire Morgan came out to that country, a handsome high-stepper from the grand circuit, she thought he looked just like the model in the horse-collar ads, and she called him Pegasus. He called her Whinny-the-Poo.

They teamed up right away, and one night they loped. It wasn't long, though, before he began straying away, and all the waggin' tongues on the ranch said he was browsing in the wild oats. Mother would nag him, and then he'd stall around and get sulky. Well, sir, it wasn't long before papa decided he couldn't stand double-harness any longer, and he vanished without a trace.

HE DIDN'T WANT TO BE A MAMA'S COLT

Q—Then you never knew your father?

A—No. My mother was saddled with all the responsibility of taking care of me. Where we lived was not exactly a one-horse town, but I always wanted to get out of there and kick up my heels a bit. Mother worked like a horse to earn my keep, but I never had done anything — although I was broke—when Gene Autry came along and bought me for $75. I was so happy I felt like a three-year-old. In fact, I was a three-year-old. That was five years ago.

Q—Did your career begin right away?

A—Well, there was a little training, and we started in movies the next year. Pretty soon Gene got to be the No. 1 cowboy of the screen, so that made me a star of horse-opera! I'll bet my father is proud of me, if he's still kicking around.

I can't even keep track of the hundreds of stage appearances we've made, or the thousands of miles we've traveled. I've shaken hands with mayors in hotel lobbies, and in Tulsa I even had a hotel room of my own, and a pedicure the next morning in the barber shop. I've broadcast on the radio. I get a lot of fan mail, and some people say I've got ears like Clark Gable and a profile like Barrymore.

All in all, I've been mighty lucky. Maybe it's the horse-shoes.

Realistic Sets in Hollywood

By GEORGE ROSS

HOLLYWOOD.

WE ARRIVED on the 20th Century-Fox ground a day after the completion of "Suez," and only a barren sandpile stood as mute and desolate evidence that a thousand turbaned sheiks had stormed over the desert scene 24 hours before.

The most disillusioning experience a novice in Hollywood can have is a tour to the back lot of any major studio, where settings for numberless pictures give the vicinity the spectral aura of a ghost town.

On the Warner lot, for example, they have constructed a replica of four or five city blocks in New York's lower east side Ghetto, and wandering through them, in the broad sunlight of a warm California day, is an eerie adventure. The reproduction of the slums is too realistic for comfort. The crowded pushcart mart, the unswept filth, the grime, the cluttered fire escapes, the wash lines and the grim and dirty little shops might have been transported bodily from that part of Manhattan nearest the Williamsburg Bridge.

They worship authenticity on that set to the extent of sticking papier mache files on the store windows and littering a decaying bookstall with magazines of recent vintage.

The novice to these sights strolls through lanes of elegant mansions and high-stoop brownstones, through cobblestone alleyways, verdant parks, or through a strip of Parisian Montmartre, and he will know they are fake.

But it makes him suspicious of other sights. He hesitates twice, after roaming through the back lot, before he ascends the steps of the administration building for fear that the whole structure will collapse under his tread, and the mountain in the background looks as if it can be hauled down over night by the men in the carpenter shop.

Even the actors become intimidated by the expert counterfeiting. We stood awhile with Pat O'Brien the other day while he waited for the cameras to click in a solemn church scene. The mellow shades of light from the stained glass windows cast soft illumination on the set, and the Irish film star ground a cigar stub under his heel. "Sometimes," he said, "I look around at this place and am afraid to smoke. Too sacrilegious."

Some of the New York streets on the 20th Century-Fox lot solace the homesick writers when nostalgia beets them at their scenario-scrivening chores.

Gene Fowler has perfected a temporary cure for those depression periods when he is brooding about New York, and he has found emulators among many in the writers' cell row. It seems that in those glum moments, Fowler retreats to the back lot, saunters through the New York streets a while, strolls under the phoney structure that passes on celluloid for the Sixth Ave. "L," and after a quarter of an hour of these peregrinations he feels fine.

He has been heard to say that he feels comfortable in California only when he is walking along that papier mache replica of Gotham.

"POVERTY ROW"

This is Hollywood, and so when the driver, who is pointing out the sights, remarks that on the left of the boulevard that connects Beverly Hills and Los Angeles is Poverty Row, you don't cast your eye around for tumble-down shacks, ill-nourished children and debris on the pavement.

Instead you will see a rickety picket fence tapering off on a narrow alley and behind it a building that looks as if it might be a pants factory. It is a factory, turning out celluloid fiction at sweatshop speed and on a shoe-string budget, for in Hollywood, Poverty Row is the name of the place where nondescript producers turn out "quickies," the films usually included in the nether end of a double feature program.

A squalid-looking place, too, this Poverty Row, and an eyesore, like any slum.

Farm and Garden

Much Interest in Lincolnshire Reds

Only Cattle of Kind in North America Admired at Willows Exhibition

Cattle breeders of British Columbia and the public at large during the last two weeks have seen the only Lincolnshire Red Shorthorns in North America.

They were shown at the Victoria and Vancouver exhibitions by Senator A. D. McRae and were from his vast farms near Qualicum Beach, Vancouver Island.

Quite naturally this type of cattle aroused a great deal of interest and attention and the men in charge of them answered literally hundreds of questions regarding their breed. They are doing extremely well on the island and their future seems assured.

Outstanding in the McRae stables were Histon Dairy King 12th and Histon Dairy Maid 89th. They were imported last year by Senator McRae from Chivers and Sons, who bred them at their farm at Histon, Cambridgeshire, England.

ARISTOCRATIC ANCESTORS

Both are aristocrats of their breed, with a long line of prize-winning ancestors, among whom are Aldenham Red Duke 3rd, Histon Ida 12th, Aldenham Waterloo Duke 4th, Northey Duchess, Histon Ida 3rd, Histon Waterloo Boy, Histon Dairy Maid 6th and Histon Dairy Maid 4th.

Histon Dairy Maid, at present on Vancouver Island, was born June 3, 1934, and the present herd sire, Histon Dairy King, was born November 25, 1935.

Carl Bauman, in charge of the cattle at the McRae farms, says Lincolnshire Reds serve a dual purpose. They are good for milk and good for beef.

"The idea," he says, "is that when milking is finished, you can put on weight and fat for beef. The milk is high grade and the beef is high grade. The milk test is very nearly as high as the Jersey."

Breeders from Washington State who saw the Lincolnshires were particularly interested and made all sorts of inquiries about them. It should not be surprising if some of the breed were exported before long to farmers in that state.

SHEEP AND SWINE

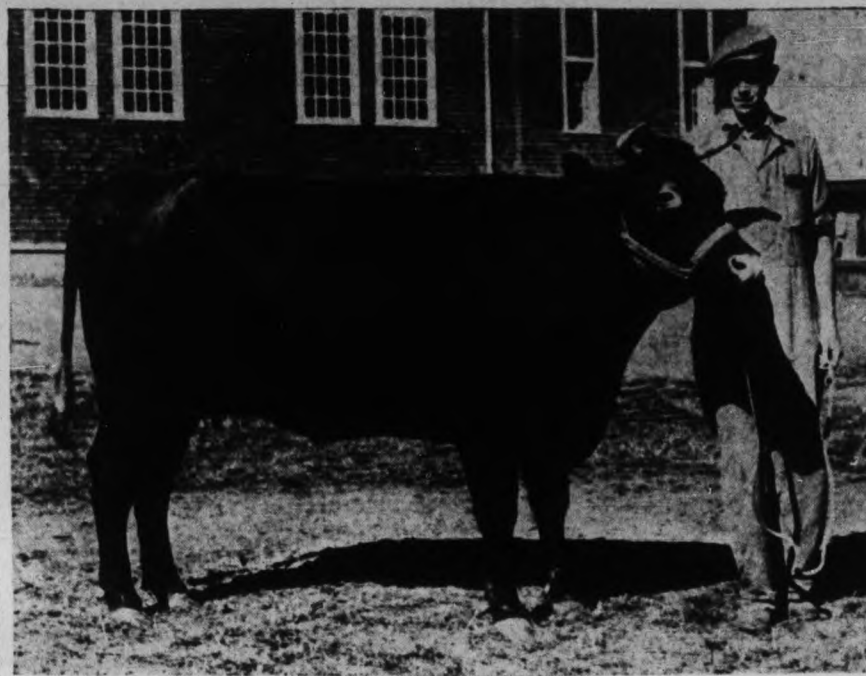

In addition to cattle, the McRae farms exhibited sheep—Scottish Highland Blackfaces and Dorset Horns, and several Yorkshire pigs.

The up-island farm is fast becoming one of the largest and most up-to-date in British Columbia. At present, in acreage, it is the largest on Vancouver Island. There are close to 1,500 acres that in time will be developed. At present there are 35 men clearing the brush and before long new buildings will be erected. Colonel J. J. Fry is the farm manager.

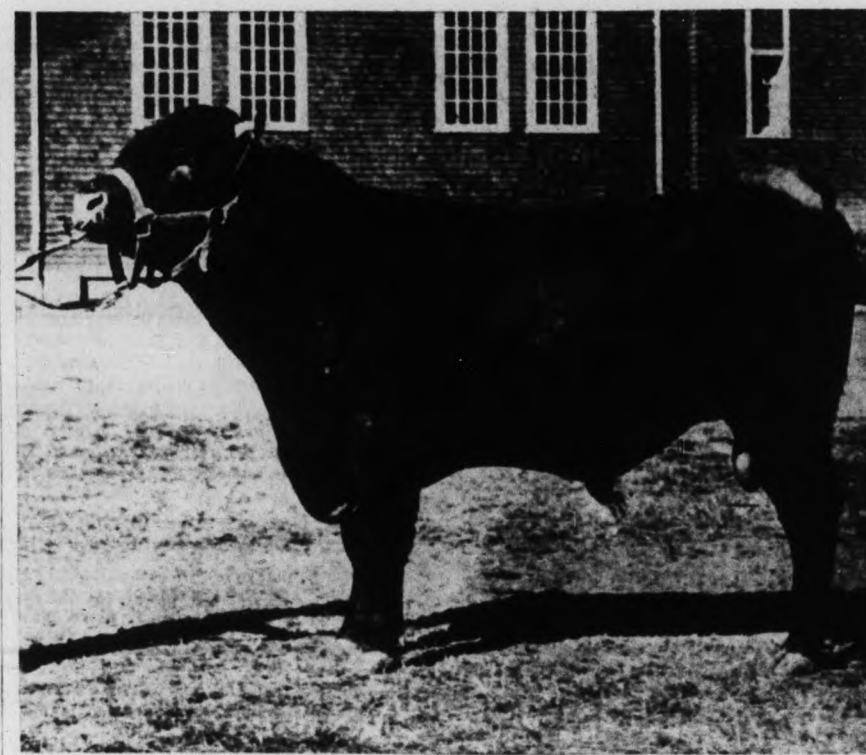

Highland Scotch collies—real sheep dogs—are also being bred at the McRae estate. Two were imported from Scotland, Pen, the female, and Glen, the male. Now there are 10 pups. They also were on exhibition at the Victoria and Vancouver fairs.

Senator McRae has been interested in the land for years and he is doing a great deal to make Vancouver Island known as one of the finest farming countries in western Canada and the Pacific Northwest.

"Eaglecrest," his magnificent estate near his farm, is fast becoming known throughout Canada as one of the most hospitable homes in British Columbia. There, nearly every weekend, are entertained guests from distant parts, who are given the opportunity to see a model farm at close range. No doubt, many of the guests at the McRae estate have decided also to take up farming on this island when the opportunity offers.

Stadacona Park Is Quiet Beauty Spot

Beautiful Flowers and Green Lawns Known to All Too Few People of City

By FRED BENNETT

Most of our own people have at least heard that Stadacona is one of the city's chain of parks; very few of them have visited it. As for the tourists, those that should know, say its existence is not known to them. To myself and my friends who visit it often, it is considered the gem of the whole park system.

Why this beauty spot is not on the regular tourist route is hard to understand. Its publicity at present consists of two signs, one on a street off the Dardennells, and it is very small, very weatherbeaten. On it the word "Stadacona Park." If a visitor noticed it at all it would be very unlikely to convey information of importance. The second, a larger one, but very weatherbeaten, is fastened to the fence around public tennis courts on Pandora Avenue; it has the same wording.

WAS PRIVATE ESTATE

This park, originally the home of a pioneer citizen, Major Dupont, was presented to the city for park purposes. The fine old Victorian residence stood in about the centre of the grounds. Those of us who had the good fortune to see it when the wisteria that seemed to cover the whole front was in bloom, will not forget it. The ghost of that wisteria can still be seen in its original position. The ranges of old-time greenhouses, originally one of the city show spots, and even later while Mr. Astley was in charge of this park, was a gathering place for the garden clan, are now falling to pieces. The curlicue and jigsaw ornamentation hangs at angles never intended but, thanks to the management of my good friend George Sargeant, the lawns are just as green, the flower beds and borders just as attractive, and the comfortable seats—judging from the unworn grass around them—just as empty.

On my very last visit, a glorious day, the park had four visitors, an elderly gentleman, a young couple on a secluded seat, myself, the fourth. Just now the chief beauty spot is a large bed of brilliant scarlet dahlias, with fern-like, bronze foliage. This bed, with its background of magnificent oak trees, will repay a visit from anyone.

Using Fruit and Vegetables

Nearly all garden and wild fruits, as well as several vegetables, may be used for wine making, but the old courtesy of being able to offer a guest a cup of delicate dandelion, elderberry, rhubarb, mulberry, parsnip, or other such home-made wines seems to be on the wane, principally because there may be some of the younger housekeepers in the city who do not know how to make it.

No great amount of equipment, however, is required and there are only two essential rules to be observed. First, the fruit or vegetable used must be of good quality, and second, strict attention must be paid to cleanliness.

Full instructions in the art of making wine in the home, together with several recipes, have been prepared by R. W. Arengo Jones of the Division of Horticulture, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, and may be obtained in booklet form on request from the Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. Following are two recipes taken from the booklet:

For beet or mangold wine, the ingredients required are 8 pounds beets or mangolds, 2 gallons water, 7 pounds sugar, 2 ounces ginger and 6 oranges. Wash the roots but do not peel. Cut in pieces and boil until soft. Add sugar, oranges (cut in slices) and ginger. Boil 20 minutes. Strain and when cool add 1 yeast cake dissolved in a little water. Allow to stand in crock for five days and then run into a keg to complete fermentation. Let stand for about one month to clear and then syphon into bottles.

PARSNIP WINE

Parsnip wine is made by first scrubbing the parsnip roots and cutting off the green stem part. Shred finely and allow two quarts of water to each quart of shredded root. Boil until soft and then strain off the liquid and let it stand for 24 hours to clear. To each gallon of the clear liquid add three pounds of sugar, one piece of ginger root and one lemon sliced thin. Boil for 20 minutes and when cool add one yeast cake. Let the wine ferment for a few days in a crock and then strain and run into a keg to complete the fermentation.

Plan Ploughing Match

The 1938 annual four-day international ploughing match, horse show and demonstration of farm machinery and latest contrivances for the home, under the auspices of the Ontario Ploughmen's Association, will be held at Minesing, Ontario, on October 11, 12, 13 and 14 inclusive. Minesing is in the heart of the picturesque county of Simcoe, 14 miles west of Barrie. Celebrating its 25th or silver anniversary, this annual moveable Mecca of the ploughmen of North America has grown to such an extent and importance that emphasis is now being laid on the fact that it is open to the ploughmen of the world.

Already several internationally known ploughmen, both in Canada and the United States, have intimated their intention of competing this year, and bearing in mind the large entry of contestants and concourse of spectators at the 1937 meeting at Fergus, Ontario, the management have every reason to expect that the silver anniversary will create a record. There will be a different program every day.

Although the skill of the ploughmen naturally will be the high spot of the meeting, there are, however, to be many other attractions. The demonstration of farm machinery will be one of the largest displays of agricultural implements in Canada. There will be a big appeal to women in the exhibition of the latest labor-saving articles and devices for use in the home. This exhibition will form a great show in itself and, in addition, special entertainments for women and children have been arranged. Indeed, particular care has been exercised to insure that the women folk and their children will have a special welcome, attended by pleasant accommodation. In short, one of the slogans this year is "Bring the Family."

The fourth, but not the least feature of the meeting is the horse show, which year by year constitutes an important exhibition in itself. With the fine horses of Simcoe County and surrounding country, the horse show promises as usual to be an excellent one.

J. A. Carroll, manager of the Ontario Ploughmen's Association, East Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, is in charge of the arrangements of this outstanding event, which annually attracts many thousands of persons.

Garden Notes For September

By V.H.S.

Clear away annuals from the borders as soon as they have finished flowering. Cut down plants as soon as bloom ceases, or at least remove dead flower heads to prevent seeding.

Continue watering flower borders, the rock garden, etc., if the weather keeps dry and hot.

Watch that the carnation layers do not dry out. July layers have made some roots and should be ready for potting-up or transferring to their permanent quarters towards the end of this month. We prefer cold-frame protection.

Canadian Condensed Milk

Canada was the largest exporter of unsweetened condensed milk to the United Kingdom in 1937, supplying 156,685 cwt. out of the total of 328,323 cwt. imported into the British market from all sources. According to the report of the Imperial Economic Committee, in the importations of sweetened whole condensed milk, Canada contributed 3,233 cwt., which was exceeded only by Eire in Empire countries.

Bulb Growing in Washington State

By DR. WILLIAM NEWTON
Part 2—Section 3
THE CONTROL OF BULB DISEASES

The bulb industry of Washington has grown rapidly, partly because the leading growers demanded and have since supported rigid state and federal regulations that prevent the sale or movement of diseased and ungraded bulbs. If the bulb nematode is detected in daffodils or narcissi, the crop involved is quarantined until all the stock has been run through a bath, a three-hour immersion period at 112 degrees Fahrenheit, or through a vapor heat chamber wherein the bulbs are retained for hours after the temperature of the bulbs themselves has reached 111 degrees. In addition a presoak of four hours at 70 degrees is required when the crop involved is definitely known to be infected with nematodes. The presoak activates the dormant nematodes, making them more susceptible to the lethal effect of the hot water. At the present time, regardless of whether nematodes are known to be attacking a particular narcissi crop, all growers are obliged to treat with hot water or hot vapor a half of their planting stock annually.

HEAT CHAMBERS

The larger growers have entirely abandoned the hot water bath in favor of the vapor heat chambers. These consist of a closed room that usually holds about 30 tons of bulbs in trays. The chamber is equipped with a powerful electric fan and the temperature is thermostatically controlled by a valve in the live steam inlet. The fan drives a vapor of air and steam throughout the chamber and by the automatic control of the amount of steam, the temperature in all parts of the chamber fluctuates often less than a degree between 110 and 112 degrees Fahrenheit. The advantage of the vapor chamber over the hot water bath is that much larger quantities of bulbs can be treated at once, thereby affecting an economy of labor. Furthermore, experience has shown that flower distortion and bulb injury occurs much less frequently as the result of the vapor treatment compared with the hot water. The third advantage is in the ease in which the bulbs may be dried off following the heat treatment. The steam jet is shut off and the fan is operated until the bulbs on the trays are quite dry. The chief disadvantage is that basal rot is not controlled by the vapor treatment in contrast with the hot water bath. The one gallon of commercial formalin added to every 200 gallons of water in the immersion baths satisfactorily prevents the spread of basal rot of narcissi, but even when formalin is added to the four-hour presoak solution, the hot vapor treatment that follows will remove the formalin so quickly its lethal effect against basal rot appears to become negligible.

Many Washington growers follow the vapor treatment of narcissi with an immersion treatment in Ceresan, five pounds per 40 gallons. This Ceresan treatment in Washington costs a little over $2.00 a ton but appears to be a good investment with stock exhibiting any basal rot.

NEW VARIETY

King Alfred still reigns supreme as the leading commercial variety. The new variety, "The First," is being grown commercially to quite an extent. It appears to outyield King Alfred and has the advantage of being slightly earlier. Although the bloom is equally showy, it does not stand up as cut bloom in shipment as well as King Alfred.

No change in the curing methods for narcissi has been instituted. The bulbs are either stacked outside in a sheltered position or in open sheds until they are thoroughly dry. They are then graded and stored in artificially cooled chambers until shipped to the forcers. Temperatures of 50 degrees are ideal and a few growers secured these cool conditions by artificial refrigeration.

Radical departures have occurred in the curing of tulips. The bulbs are harvested before the foliage has died down, when the bulbs themselves are perfectly white. The trays of bulbs, immediately after lifting, are placed in curing rooms equipped with an air intake that consists of a heater and a blower. The bulbs are left at 75 degrees Fahrenheit in this chamber for about a week. To obtain a uniform temperature throughout a curing chamber, it is important that the inlet be larger than the outlet to insure that the whole room is under a positive pressure at all times. After being held a week at 75 degrees Fahrenheit the bulbs are taken out, cleaned and graded and returned to the same curing chamber for 30 days at 65 degrees, followed by a period at 60 degrees or lower. It is very difficult to control mould development at any temperature below 55 degrees Fahrenheit, hence, after the month at 65 degrees the tulip bulbs are maintained until sold to the forcer at a temperature between 55 and 60 degrees Fahrenheit. The 75-degree and 60-degree treatment following early lifting develops a closely attached tough, light-brown skin. Eastern forcers have objected to tulip bulbs grown in the Pacific Northwest because their loose tunics or skins fail to serve as a protective barrier against injury.

DISEASE CURE

The new method of curing entirely removes this criticism, and has further proved to be an important factor in the control of the most important tulip disease, namely, "fire" or botrytis. The Washington results substantiate the investigations of the Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology at Saanichton, that early lifting is an important control measure. Our recommendation was based upon two observations, first that the fungus involved, botrytis tulipae, continues to develop underground late in the season, hence early removal from the soil checks this invasion into bulb tissue. The second reason is that the disease is carried over from one season to the next in the bulb foliage. When tulips are harvested late the foliage residues from the bulb fields, and the removal of all foliage is an important control measure.

In practice, early lifting and high temperature curing has given excellent results in the control of the botrytis disease. After the bulbs are baked at 75 degrees for a week in the air that is in constant circulation, the white skins have become thick and light brown in color, but in addition the infected fraction of the bulbs usually develop conspicuous chalky lesions during the curing process. These lesions are quite conspicuous and the bulbs bearing them can be easily detected and removed when the bulbs are moving over the grading belts. Thus, the fraction of disease-bearing bulbs is reduced by the new curing process.

Canada Chief Supplier

British statistics for 1937 show that bacon imports from Canada, the largest empire supplier, expanded by 27 per cent to 1,387,000 cwt., and comprised 20 per cent of the total bacon imported into the United Kingdom. The statistics also show that in 1937 Canada displaced the United States as the world's chief source of imported hams to the British market, sending 314,600 cwt. compared with 277,700 cwt. in 1936, an increase of 13 per cent.

Fall Bridal Gown Quaint or Modernistically Streamlined

Attendants Wear Frocks to Match Bride's Attire

By MARIAN YOUNG
THIS FALL'S BRIDE may march to the flower-trimmed altar in a gown as quaintly picturesque as an old-fashioned garden or she may wear one as modern as a streamlined train. There are no set rules about the type of wedding dress she should choose. She can let her individual taste be her guide.

When it comes to the subject of color, however, convention steps in and decrees anew that white's the thing for the bride who plans a formal wedding. She can dress her attendants in any or several colors that please her, but she'll do well to remember that the smartest brides pick plain white for themselves.

CREAM-WHITE BOUFFANT

Among the bouffant gowns, one of moire, white lace, white velvet and white taffeta are among the most popular fabrics. And white silk jersey which lends itself admirably to intricate draping is widely featured in the most exclusive bridal shops.

Among the bouffant gowns, one of cream-white moire, over a genuine hoopskirt, is outstanding. With a tight bodice, bracelet-length sleeves, puffed at the shoulders, and a softly draped, off-the-shoulder decolletage, this is utterly charming. With it, the bride might carry an old-fashioned bouquet of assorted white flowers.

It's a new idea to put the maid of honor and the bridesmaids in copies of the wedding gown itself. For instance, a bride in a bouffant dress might have her attendants wear bouffant frocks exactly like her own except that theirs would be in colors—her's in white.

Smart color schemes for fall include the maid of honor in creamy, golden brown, carrying a sheaf of orange and yellow flowers, and the maids in shades of yellow and pale orange.

Also, the maid of honor in a deep yellow gown with brown velvet ribbon sash and the bridesmaids in delectable blue dresses with yellow and brown velvet sashes. All might carry bouquets of yellow and blue flowers. In all cases, though their gowns are cut alike, the bride wears a veil and the attendants wear hats. This fall, they are more likely to wear tiny, flower-trimmed doll hats than huge cartwheels.

home, the fall bride might wear a floor-length dinner dress with sleeves, either long or short; and a small hat of flowers atop her upswept coiffure. In this case, she would choose some other color than white. Her maid of honor would wear a similar type of dress in a harmonizing color.

The bride who is going to be married in a daytime dress usually chooses a suit in which she can travel later. It may be in silk or wool, depending on the weather. New and chic are simply but not mannishly tailored silk dresses with contrasting jackets. One pretty silk model in a soft, deep shade of grey has a mustard yellow jacket in heavier silk that stimulates suede. With this, the bride might wear dark grey shoes with mustard yellow platform soles, grey suede bag, white gloves and a grey hat with a mustard flower or ribbon.

How the Quintuplets Have Changed

By ERNIE PYLE

CALLANDER, Ont.

THREE YEARS ago this month we visited the famous Dionne quintuplets and their equally famous mentor, Dr. Allan Roy Dafee.

We came back rather half-heartedly, for our interest in the quintuplets had waned. But one look—and now I am all worked up again.

These almost mythical babies have grown up into real live children. They aren't dolls any longer, they're humans. And they're just as beautiful as they used to be.

Everything has changed greatly since our last visit. The town of Callander is full of new buildings, and nearly every house has a tourist sign. There's even a new restaurant and inn right next door to Dr. Dafee's house.

"Quintuplet Village," two miles away, has changed too. Three years ago the road was a rutted dirt lane. The new Dafee log hospital had just been finished.

There was one curio store by the roadside.

Today a paved highway leads out. The place itself looks like a county fair. There are acres and acres for parking. Motorcycle cops direct traffic.

The hospital grounds have been enlarged, and there is an enclosed playground for the children. There are four stores, instead of one. Two of them belong to Oliva Dionne.

On three sides of Oliva's biggest store are immense signboards, sticking high above the roof. On them are painted the quintuplets' pictures. In big letters it says "The Only Souvenir and Refreshment Booth Operated by the Father of the Quintuplets—Oliva Dionne." The same thing is in French on the other side.

The store is large, selling everything you can think of, and there must be a dozen clerks. Oliva himself stays in a curtained booth at the rear. Across the top a sign says "Autographs." Oliva was there when I went in.

There is nothing of the north woods farmer about Oliva now. His clothes fit well, his shirts are city shirts, he wears a wrist watch. He looks much more New York than he does Corbair, Ont. In fact, he's a good-looking man. He speaks with very little accent.

A friend introduced us. Oliva wasn't surly, but I can't say that he helped any with the conversation. He lit a cigarette, leaned back in the open window, crossed his arms, and stood with a sort of "I've got your number" smile on his face.

Oliva was suspicious, as apparently he is with everybody. I didn't try to make anything but small talk. He answered my remarks but that was all. I was soon ready to go.

At 9:30 sharp the hospital gates open for half an hour, and the crowd jams in. We string out in two single files, and go through turnstiles at the door of the playground house. You can hear the children squealing and playing before you get in.

The playground is horseshoe shaped, with no roof. Sort of like a miniature football stadium, except that the audience is only one row deep, stands up, looks through windows, and has a roof over its head.

The playground is probably 100 feet long and 60 feet wide. You look at the children through ordinary-sized glass windows, with a screen on the outside. The glass is clear, but the screen is very fine, and is sprayed with a bright aluminum solution. This works the miracle of permitting you to see through, while the children can't see back through.

To tell the truth, your vision is not a clear one. The screen is too fine. And the children are always at least 20 feet away. A little fence keeps them from getting closer to the windows. Even those who know them can hardly tell them apart through the screen.

The playground is neat and ordered, like a Hollywood movie playground. Soft green lawn, colored umbrellas, swings and slides, sandpit in the centre, sidewalk around the edge.

Each child has a tricycle. And a sand bucket and shovel. And one of those steel spring horseback things. A nurse in a white uniform sits in a lawn swing.

The children are on the move all the time. They seem not to be conscious that scores of people are watching them. They talk a great deal, but you can't hear from where you stand. They carry the horses around more than they ride on them. They make mud pies. They go talk to the nurse frequently. Seldom does one sit down alone and just sit.

You can travel thousands of miles, and I'll bet not one in a hundred of you will be disappointed in the quintuplets. The screened window may disappoint you, but the children won't.

HOW YOU LOSE AT CONTRACT

By WM. E. MCKENNEY

A Certain Degree of Pessimism About Suit Breaks Sometimes Wins

THE PESSIMIST at the bridge table is often wrong, as a lucky break in a suit, imperfect defence, or some other factor frequently makes impossible contracts turn out right. However, it is sometimes wise to be slightly pessimistic about suit breaks, and to adopt every precaution to bring in the needed number of tricks, even though this may require unusual suit management.

It was the solution of just this problem that gave Joseph Cohn of Wooster, O., a top score on a board in the recent men's pair championship at Ashbury Park, N.J., won by Charles H. Goren of Philadelphia and B. Jay Becker of New York.

In order to win two spade tricks, if possible, Cohn went up with the queen in dummy on the first trick, and then made the unusual play of the club nine from dummy, playing the three from his own hand when East played low.

West discarded. The club king was cashed and dummy entered with the heart ace, and all of the club suit brought in.

Thus five no trump was made, Cohn alone making the game contract, as no other declarer had been quite so pessimistic, and profitably so.

In rubber bridge, with the same opening, the play is one of pure safety, but in duplicate, with match point scoring and the great value of extra tricks, few players would have the hardihood to risk permitting a possible singleton jack in the West hand to win.

Squeeze Play Turns Apparent Defeat After Unexpected Ruff Into Victory

SOUTH'S contract looked easy until West ruffed the third trick, then the problem appeared well-nigh insoluble.

Had South been a player less keen than Edward M. Cook of Philadelphia, former national men's pair champion, the hand would have been just another story of defeat. The unexpected ruff just tested his mettle.

Cook will be one of the stars at the forthcoming Western States tournament of the American Contract Bridge League, to be in Pittsburgh September 27 to October 2.

The opening lead was won in dummy and the club finesse taken at once.

When the queen held, Cook laid down the ace, only to see West pounce upon it with a trump. A trump return prevented him from fulfilling his contract with a cross ruff, as he would then be left with a losing club at the end.

Cook won the trump with the jack, and ruffed a club in dummy. Now the heart jack was returned. The lead marked the king in the East hand, and unless he held the nine also, there was a good chance to make the hand. East covered and South ruffed. An other club was ruffed in dummy, and the heart three returned and ruffed.

In dummy there remained the heart eight and the four diamonds. East had the heart six, three diamonds, and the club king. Cook still had the ace and king of spades, the club ten, and two diamonds, while West held two spades, the heart nine and two diamonds.

The two high trumps squeezed East, who could not retain the club king and diamond protection. West had been squeezed through being forced to protect the hearts, a line of defence he had not anticipated.

Regard for Manners Keeps Marriage On the Plane of Gay Companionship

By RUTH MILLET

SO FAR NO ONE has ever written a book called "Manners in Marriage"—but it's a book that needs to be written.

For all too many brides and grooms fall into bad marriage manners just because they don't know how to change the comparatively "formal" manners of friendship to something easier and more durable. They can't quite make the change—so they give up manners entirely in their everyday living.

While no married man with a sense of humor is going to jump to his feet every time his wife comes into the room, or hurry across the room, match in hand, every time she picks up a cigarette—still he ought to remember always that she is a woman and entitled to all the fundamental courtesies a gentleman accords women.

He ought not to expect her to wait on him. He ought not to yell at her. He ought not to sit by and let her lift heavy objects or struggle to get her galoshes on. He ought to pull out her chair, help her into the car, let her go through doors first. He ought to walk beside her and not three paces ahead—carrying the bundles, of course, if there are bundles.

Both owe gaiety to the marriage and both ought to work at keeping companionship "alive." It's only good manners to make sharing the same experiences over and over again seem like a privilege.

Both ought to try to save the other's "face." And both should respect the other's rights as a person. That lets out—prying questions, opening mail addressed to the other, violating confidences, asking to have telephone conversations repeated, telling friends about the other's faults and peculiarities, trying to force conversation, and making fun of the other's ideas and opinions.

Friends of one not liked by the other ought not to be invited to the house when seeing them outside is possible. And if a wife is thoughtful, she tries to get rid of her bridge club guests before her husband comes home.

Our Pioneers Play the Ponies

ANOTHER B.C. ARCHIVES ADVENTURE

By REBY EDMOND

BEACON HILL was Victoria's early playground. On the Queen's Birthday, things were always stirring over there. There were broad jumps and high jumps for which Robert Melrose and his pals came in from Craigflower to compete. ("We won a clock each," he reports). There were also slippery pigs to chase and greased poles to climb, but the event of the day and the one for which all the local gentry assembled with their surplus cash was the horse race.

The old track is still there, running around the base of Beacon Hill. Today, of course, it is smoothed out under macadam. You can cover the course now in your car if you want, it runs past the totem pole around to Dallas Road where the sightseers are parked looking over the Straits, around the curve past Lovers' Lane, on around past the deer pens and back to the totem. This is said to be a measured mile. In the old days, the crowd used to assemble on the hill above the track where the summer house is now. There wasn't so much broom in those days and they could watch the horses sweep around below them without missing a second of the race.

There were some good horses in the town then and they had names one could pronounce like Silvertail or Joe or Black Boy. These were frequently spurred on by horses brought down from the Cariboo when the excitement was great. We find the usual early Victoria names featured. Last week they were winning prizes for their cabbages at the local fair; this week, they are supervising the race. The judges in 1859 were Joseph Pemberton and Captain Cooper, while the stewards were J. W. McKay and G. Wight.

The horses usually raced for the Queen's Plate in the big race and for sweepstakes of $50 or $100 in the others. After the racing was over they would all go off to a racing dinner at the Royal Hotel (tickets $2 including wine, J. Wilcox, prop.).

It is difficult to learn anything about these early races from the papers of the day because the editor, Amon de Cosmos, was fighting for representative government at the time. Governor Douglas, whom we have been taught to revere as a "great figure," was going through a period of amazing unpopularity and any report of a public celebration was likely to shoot off at a tangent and become a political paragraph. Here is one following the 1859 race:

"The races came off on Beacon Hill in the presence of a large concourse of spectators, there not being less than 2,000 persons present. Governor Douglas, accompanied by his family and attended by Judge Begby and staff, paid a short visit to the course. The reception of the Governor must have been anything but flattering as not a single cheer was raised, or attempted to be given for the representative of Her Majesty in occasion of the anniversary of the birthday of their sovereign. 'A straw shows which way the wind blows' and if Her Majesty's Government have any regard for the loyalty of the British population in these colonies toward their Queen, it will not allow it to be crushed by the continuance in position of an officer who has merited and received the contempt and coldness of Her Majesty's subjects."

There was another race in October of the same year and de Cosmos reports: "... His Excellency, Governor Douglas, was also an hour or so on the ground, but as usual on public gatherings he was seen but not noticed. During the period of half an hour the only person who paid any attention to him was an attaché of one of the departments by raising his hat."

Occasionally there was an occurrence into which politics could not be dragged. The case of the dishonest bookie was one of these. It seems that this sporting gentleman had set up a booth on the grounds for a number of years past but at last in '62 something happened which showed that his little game was not all sweetness and light. A mob quickly collected around his booth and someone overturned it. Then the race was on. It soon became evident that this was more fun than chasing the greasy pig and the crowd was delighted. But the bookie did not know their exact humor. They didn't sound delighted and his conscience weighed him down in his headlong flight around the hill. Someone picked up a length of rope and lassoed him. He went down kicking like a steer, his ill-gotten gains jingling from his pockets. Some kindly soul shouted: "Don't hang him! Don't hang him, boys!" He knew he was done for then. He slipped down in a dead faint while the crowd roared with laughter.

Our pioneers had a robust form of humor.

NIGHT CRUISE ON THE RIVER THAT RISES IN THE BLACK FOREST

ON THE BLUE DANUBE.

AFTER THE RAILROAD JOURNEY from Yugoslavia, our dash into Hungary under the protection of military escort and the belated arrival after dark, what better than that this golden morn in Budapest should offer a fresh program for inspection?

First awake, my wife, with that nameless ecstasy common to the California born, betook herself, as they say, to the window drape, flung it aside and threw the case-wide. But as a matter of fact, anybody who ever tried to slip a curtain, operate a Venetian blind or open a Continental window knows that it is not a noiseless performance. Aroused, I peered at the feminine form, garbed in a dressing gown, standing in the oblong frame of light. There was something in the relaxed figure leaning against the casement that betrayed uncertainty. Tableau!

"It isn't blue," she said presently. "One might just as well get up to greet the Hudson or the Susquehanna or the Thames at London. I dreamed all night of the Beautiful 'Blue' Danube."

"But, my dear, those three magic words are the product of poetic license, like the Blue Alsatian Mountains and India's Coral Strand. All the coral I saw in India was a low-grade celluloid. Another thing you mustn't forget is that the Danube, taking its source from a mountain spring near Freudenstadt in the Black Forest, started out clear as crystal, deepened into blue down through Ulm and kept her face clean until she arrived at Regensburg, where the high-born, immaculate stream probably fell in with questionable company and lost some of her lustre. It may be that she arrived at Vienna with enough class to arouse the poetic fancy of Johann Strauss and inspire 'The Blue Danube Waltz' which thrilled us when we were 21. Once christened blue, this romantic river has remained blue, and so through all eternity past Belgrade, Bulgaria, Roumania and onward, emptying through four mouths into the Black Sea, she makes her deliberate way.

"Try to remember not the vanishing azure of this mighty flood, but that the royal Castle of Buda, just across the river and visible from your window, has for 700 years been inhabited by Hungarian kings. The city around it was wrenched from Buda, brother of Attila, the Scourge, whose hordes slaked their thirst in the Danube when it was probably better drinking water than it is today. The castle has been destroyed and rebuilt several times, but the foundation walls date back to 1240, when a Mongol invasion was dreaded throughout eastern Europe. Taken for itself, this castle is regarded as one without a peer. The superlative beauty of the city as a whole will make this trip worth while. The mummified right hand of St. Stephen is here, 900 years behind it. For the moment put the Blue Danube out of your mind, have breakfast and let us fare forth to see what we can see."

BUT MY LADY AT THE WINDOW was in no mood to be talked out of her sudden discovery that the river was not as advertised. It had long been her dream to stand like Balboa on "a peak at Darien," so to speak, and behold the sky-tinted Pacific. "It ain't natural," as the saying goes, to take it on the chin after long waiting and to come out of the scuffle better than you went in. I should have known this at the time. But men don't seem to know anything at any time when it comes to appraising woman-kind.

She replied, "I think we had better remain quiet during the day and go out this evening," a proposal that I accepted with becoming grace. I'm that way when there is no alternative.

After sunset Budapest becomes at once transformed into a city of gaiety. The population, or that part of it that would see and be seen, comes down to the river promenades and cafes, there to partake of cooling libations, drink in the salubrious night air and spark under the deep purple skies. Countless orchestras flooding the ozone with Hungarian music, all of which is highly rhapsodical and soothing, set the nerves tingling with exultation. The jazz and the blare so prevalent in other localities throughout Europe, and I might say at home, is entirely absent. Loud-speakers, ballyhoo and competitive rackets are unknown along the Danube. The passing show of unconscious beauty is of the first order, the more attractive because of a high order of decorum that prevails to a marked degree. The girls certainly know how to dress on little money.

ALONG THE COURSE of the river appropriated to night life, small passenger steamers, each with an orchestra skilled in the production of intoxicating music, move slowly through the luminous haze of shaded electric globes. Budapest has done away with glaring light. Lulled by the sense of peace, yet with a desire for mild action, I prevailed upon my all-time traveling companion to board one of the river boats and sail away.

From a cozy upper deck, seated in easy chairs, we watched the city, reflected on the bosom of the Danube, fade astern. One by one the spider-webs defining the bridges that united Buda with Pest, were swallowed up in the purple depths, leaving only the cordage of electric festoons spanning the stream. Mile after mile, the side wheels turning over ponderously against the current, we ploughed out of the city limits into the country dissecting the sparkling suburbs mapped by diminishing electric stars.

Presently the ship began to turn; the machinery ceased its throbbing while the starboard shore line fell across our bow, ran down the rail and went astern, the port shore looming far away against the night

WHEN YOU START rolling the ball of argument on subjects relating to husbands and wives it is difficult to stop it. It is surprising the number of men who have volunteered their views on who works the harder, husband or wife, since the question was first raised, but what is more surprising is the timidity they display when you presume you are permitted to print their names as well as their views.

"Heavens, no!" they exclaim. "My wife might read it, and then there would be trouble." One of the contributors to the discussion had married a nurse and supported the argument that husbands work harder.

SYSTEM SLIPS

"When we first married," he said, "she worked on schedule like she did in hospital. Everything was done on time and her work was soon finished. She had plenty of leisure time. Now, with no one to check on the schedule it has become shattered. She's always busy with no more work to do."

There were many other arguments, but unless the husbands can muster courage to let their names be published with their views, we'll skip the subject and turn to another that has been brought into the limelight lately, and that is, just what amount of freedom a husband is entitled to.

FREEDOM FOR HUSBANDS

You probably read recently in the newspapers about the Australian on a long holiday who proudly displayed to London reporters a card which his wife had given him before he departed on his holiday. In case you didn't see it it was in the form of a permit in which the lawfully-wedded wife appended her signature to a card in which she said: "I do hereby permit my husband to go where he pleases, when he pleases and to drink what he pleases. And further, I permit him to keep and enjoy the company of any lady or ladies he sees fit, as I know him to be a good judge. I want him to enjoy life in this world, as I know he will be a long time dead."

Since the Australian proudly displayed this it has come to light that his wife was not original. Frank E. Shea of New York has produced a card with the same wording which is six years old. It is signed with his wife's name, but the signature was a forgery, which possibly leaves the Australian claimant as the lone possessor of the remarkable Husband's License.

FIFTY-FIFTY

Experienced husbands, however, seem to take a cynical view.

"Yes," said one of them. "The Australian might think he had something, but he hadn't. From years of study of the feminine mind there are only two conclusions I can arrive at. One, that the lady was tiring of her husband and didn't care what he did. The other, that without expressing the thought to her unsuspecting husband—she said to herself 'what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and in signing the permit I naturally assume the same rights myself.'"

YORKSHIRE

The short reference to the Yorkshire dialect here some time ago brought me a friendly but emphatic lecture on the sterling qualities of Yorkshiremen, their qualities of thrift, sound thinking, determination and aggressiveness.

It appears Artist Douglas Flintoff is among the Yorkshiremen in this city whose local pride leads him to make the claim that a Yorkshireman possesses all the attributes natives of other sections only claim to possess and many others besides.

To substantiate his claims he brought me a Yorkshire almanac, printed in the form of a half-size magazine.

"John Hartley's Original Clock Almanack," it is called, and it appears that for 73 years this almanac has ranked as a household book without which no Yorkshire home is complete.

It is all in the Yorkshire dialect except the advertisements, nearly every second one of which is about birth control printed in very plain English. Yorkshiremen must be proud of their dialect and anxious to preserve it, for the printers, Watmoughs Ltd., Idle, Bradford, specialize in publications printed in the dialect, but with their words of "yerd, soa, mich, abaght, durt, agh, maath," and so on, it is a little difficult if you don't know the language.

VERY CAUTIOUS

From this almanac it would appear, however, from parts that are easy to translate, that the morals and welfare of Yorkshiremen with a new pattern of light points. All echoes from the engine-room died; a brooding silence fell as our craft, resigned to the tide, swung downward toward the distant floodlights on palace, parliament and cathedral spires, shimmering like jewels in the sable sky. From a passing steamer, slipping upstream and all aglow with lanterns, we could hear violin and zither sighing and throbbing Hungarian rhapsodies.

"This at last is the Beautiful Blue Danube," echoed a voice aglow side; "the blue deep as night. It is like floating on a sea of indigo. Strauss must have written his waltz in the dark."

The merciful shadows had transformed the hour into a dream. What could I reply to this magnificent admission? Under the spell of imagination, after leaving 1,000 miles (half the distance from the bubbling spring in the Black Forest), the Danube, gliding onward to the Black Sea, was purified, re-deemed and retitled for my lady's and other eyes that will for all eternity look upon its perpetual blue.

are guided by a set of proverbs. Douglas suggests publication of a few of them might help other people to approach the same strength of character that Yorkshiremen are famous for.

Treth, like grease, works to t' top.

If ya mun get wed, pick a sweet apple.

It's better to be up wi' t' lark ner dahn wi' t' mezzles.

A man isn't paid for havin' brains, but for ewsin' 'em.

If tha does ow't for nowt dew it for thee-sen.

That is just a few of them, but judging from that few I should say for a cautious race the Yorkshiremen must take the palm. I like the way they go one better than the rest of the world with that one, "Look before you leap" by the addition, "then don't always leap."

ON THE BEAT

Chatted with a citizen annoyed at the claim of the fire chief of Oak Bay that his men work only five days a week, five and a half hours a day. "I don't know how long they work," he said, "but their duty hours are so long that their families are pulling the old gag, 'who is this strange man?' when they get time to go home." He argues that hours on duty are the ones that should count, or you might as well claim a policeman on patrol isn't working unless he is making an arrest.

According to a chap who talked with them, the war veterans from Chicago who visited here recently with their band were on a nice trip. The whole 77 of them were employees of the Edison Commonwealth Electric Light and Power Company, from linemen to managers. The firm gave them 14 days vacation with pay, in addition to their usual annual holiday, to attend the convention at Los Angeles, and paid all expenses. The cost to the company was $25,000.

BE NATURAL
It's not the rouge; it's not the clothes. Where beauty of body and face e'er shows. It's the character, the life, the things we do. The joys and sorrows we all go through. That builds within each body form. From the very day on which we're born. Grace, loveliness and beauty rare. Which cannot be embellished by cosmetic care. The eyebrows, the cheeks, the lips divine, Belong to God; they ne'er were thine. From Eternity, which ne'er shall end, God gave you birth. He is your friend. Early Days With The Mounties

More "Reminiscences of an Uneventful Life"

By CHARLES TENNENT

STEAM thawing machines became more general later, but were not much used at the time I refer to. The method of thawing the ground differed according to the strata you were working in. Dominion, Bonanza, Hunker, Sulphur and parts of El Dorado creeks generally had a layer of frozen soil just under the moss, varying from a few feet to 15 or 20 feet, under that the lighter stone or gravel of the old bed of the creek or river, beneath that a layer of larger rocks, and below that again the pay streak, holding such heavy substances as black sand, and gold embedded in clay. Finally the bedrock, in the crevices of which much gold was found. The only way to get through the top soil was with the pick, and then it would be necessary to sharpen the pick three or four times a day. When the first gravel was reached the custom was to build and light the fire last thing at night, and trust it would thaw the ground downwards possibly 18 inches. One thing it certainly did was to bring the sides down on the top of the fire, and that had all to be cleaned out in the morning before any real sinking could be done. When the heavier boulders or rocks were found, we carefully saved them up at the mouth of the shaft and at night a fire was built on the surface, one layer of wood, one of rock, and so on. When it was burned out the hot rocks were shoveled into the shaft and then tamped down with moss to keep out the frost. Ground treated like this would thaw downwards as much as three feet in a night, but not always.

Generally I handled the windlass while Jack worked in the shaft. I also had to get the wood ready to put down the shaft at night, and keep an eye on the stove in the shack, and the cooking, simple in the extreme. Once or twice a week we soaked and boiled enough beans to last a few days, and when they were ready put them in a dutch oven, in an outside fire. But by the time the real cold had set in we had lots of fresh meat. One day Jack was working, looking around for dry logs when he suddenly came on a large bull moose. He told me he fired one shot and hit him just behind the shoulder. The moose charged straight at him and he shot him in the heart. The carcass showed this was correct. He came back to camp and told me the news, and we got a saw and a butcher knife and a couple of bugs, as it was getting dark and we didn't want the wolves to get at it. A bug is the most primitive form of lantern and is frequently used in bush country. In the side of a tin can you cut a cross, bending the points inwards, into the hole you insert a candle, then you affix a long wire handle to the tin to carry it by. It throws a good light and never blows out. It took us all night to do our butchering, and about daylight we started for camp, each one carrying a capacity load. It was a half mile to camp and through heavy brush and wind-falls; a good deal of snow on the ground and still snowing. After a luxurious breakfast we started again for our cache and by nightfall had most of it safely hung on the back of the shack where it froze at once. We got over 700 pounds of meat, rough weight.

I made a trip into Dawson and met Frank Hales, who got interested in our claim and asked to be allowed to come out and work on a percentage basis. I tried to dissuade him, as we had had no prospects so far, and from the nature of the bedrock (a rotten mica-schist) did not expect anything great at present. However, he made up his mind, and a few days after I returned he came out, having previously dispatched a man with two window lights to replace the cheese-cloth with which our windows were heretofore glazed. For this service he paid the man 75 cents a pound and expenses at road-houses coming and going.

It was pleasant having Frank with us. He was a hard worker and absolutely straight. A Devonshire man by birth, and still thought Devonshire was the only country. He had worked for some years in Victoria, and often told me of the time he had laid the concrete sidewalk in front of the Driad Hotel (now Spencer's block). He stayed with us for several weeks, but being of an impatient nature, and gold not coming quickly enough, he got a yearning for the lights of Dawson, the dance halls, saloons and gambling tables. I missed him very much and was now left entirely to Jack's company.
